OSWEGO

Oswego is situated in the east part of Labette County, two miles from its eastern boundary, on the Neosho River, which here makes a sharp bend to the east. The town site is sufficiently elevated and uneven to afford excellent drainage. From time immemorial, on account of the widely extended and picturesque view obtained from it, this spot, previous to its settlement by white men, had been a favorite resort for the Indians. The valley of the Neosho, with its broad belt of timber, is visible for many miles to the south, east and north; the valley of the Labette to the west, and far beyond it, from twelve to fifteen miles distant, extends from north to south, the long line of table land which divides the valley of the Neosho from that of the Verdigris. This spot was for many years the home of the celebrated Indian chief, White Hair. It is the cemetery of his three wives, who were buried according to the custom of his tribe, on the surface of the ground, and covered over with a pile of stones. It was also for a time the home of the notorious John Matthews, an Indian trader, and confederate guerrilla chief, whose little daughter was burned to death by a prairie fire a short time before her father was killed. Matthews' house stood on the government road, from Humboldt to Fort Gibson, near a famous spring in the east part of town. Up to 1865, the place was known as "White Hair's Village," when the name was changed to "Little Town." During this year the first white settlers arrived upon the ground. They were from the first favorably impressed with the location. It was presumed to be heathful, it commanded a view of a broad expanse of country, it was contiguous to a large body of timber, it possessed an abundance of fine building stone, and numerous springs flowed from the hillsides down the ravine on either side. But little, if anything, was left to be desired. These first settlers arrived in the fall, and immediately commenced the erection of log cabins for their protection during the coming winter, and until such time as more commodious houses could be built. Their names were: J. C. Rexford, A. P. Elsbee, C. C. and D. M. Clover, C. H. Bent, Samuel Collins, J. Q. Cowell, Jaber Smith, W. C. Watkins and W. R. Williamson. Rexford & Elsbee opened for sale a small lot of goods in a small log building.

In the spring of 1866, the number of the settlers was increased by the arrival of James Jones, T. J. Floarnoy, J. F. Newton, Richard D. Sloan, H. W. Thompson, H. W. Bridgeman, N. H. Carr, T. J. Buntain, Hiram Hollinsworth and C. W. Talbot. In the early summer, William Herbaugh, D. W. Clover and others arrived. Elsbee, Bridgeman & Carr opened a store and established a trading post, Elsbee having an Indian wife.

In the summer of 1867, quite a number of new and valuable settlers arrived. Among them were Dr. William S. Newlon, Rev. T. H. Canfield, D. W. McCue, W. P. Bishop, A. L. Austin, Dr. R. W. Wright, and the Waskey brothers. In the summer of 1866, measures were taken to organize a town, and a preliminary survey made. About this time the name "Little Town," was superseded by "Oswego," many of the settlers having come from near Oswego, N. Y. In August, 1867, the Oswego Town Company was legally organized and chartered, the incorporators being Dr. John F. Newlon, president; D. W. Clover, secretary; J. Q. Cowell, C. C. Clover, T. J. Flournoy, Thomas J. Buntain, and D. M. Clover. A. L. Austin was chosen treasurer of the corporation. The town company was re-organized in the winter of 1867-68, and the stock distributed into thirty-two shares. From the time of the complete and final organization of the company, the town made rapid growth. This was doubtless in part owing to the liberal manner in which the company dealt with private and public parties. A town lot was donated to every person who would erect thereon a dwelling house, to private business enterprises, which gave promise of being of material benefit to the town, to the public schools, to other public enterprises, and to every church organization that desired a lot for the purpose of erecting thereon a house of worship.

The first frame house in Oswego was erected in September, 1867, by Dr. William S. Newlon, previously to which time there had been built about twelve log cabins. A frame store building was erected by Thomas J. Buntain, and later in the fall the town contained eleven log building and ten frame ones—the population consisting of sixteen families, less than one hundred inhabitants.

Nelson Carr was the first Postmaster, appointed in 1867. At this time there were four stores and a blacksmith shop, the stores being kept by Carr & Bridgeman, Waskey & Sons, J. Q. Cowell and R. W. Wright. Besides these, there were two provision stores. The first blacksmith was M. George. The first hotel was kept by D. W. Clover. It was a log building with a frame front, and stood where now stands the Oswego House. This frame front was utilized for many purposes. Besides being the hotel office and reception room, it served for County Clerk's office, County Attorney's office, Justice of the Peace's office, and as a place of general rendezvous for all the people within reach; where all kinds of neighborhood foreign and political discussions occurred.

In the spring of 1868, immigration began to flow in rapidly, and all new comers were met by the citizens of Oswego with generous hospitality, with the view of encouraging them to stay; acting in part, perhaps, on the principle that loneliness and poverty desire to be relieved.

Oswego was incorporated as a town February 8, 1870. the first Board of Trustees being R. W. Wright, J. F. Waskey, M. Read, J. F. Newlon and W. M. Johnson. It was organized as a city of the third class April 6, 1870, with J. F. Newlon, Mayor, and for Councilmen, J. T. Pierson, E. R. Trask, W. Wells, D. W. Clover and R. W. Wright. It was organized as a city of the second class March 16, 1871. M. Read was elected Mayor in April, 1871; J. F. Waskey, 1872; R. W. Wright, 1873, '74 and '75; and C. M. Condon in 1876, '77, '78, '79 and 1881. The city government is now under the management of the following officials: Mayor, C. M. Condon; Clerk, Thomas Bulwer; Attorney, J. A. Gates; Police Judges, E. D. Kiersey, J. E. Benseter; Constables, Frank Blanchard and A. Y. Sweet.

Up to the close of 1867 Oswego had no regular mail service. Although D. W. Carr had previously been appointed Postmaster, yet no mail route had been established and the mails were brought from Humboldt and Osage Mission by private individuals, employed by the citizens of the town and country. With the beginning of 1868, a weekly route was established by the Government. A rather strange method of distribution seems to have been used at that time. It is said that when the mails arrived a large crowd would be gathered from a distance of fifteen and twenty miles around awaiting their mails. As the Postmaster opened the packages the names upon them would be called, and in case a response was heard the package or letter would be flung in the direction from which the sound appeared to come, and the owner would jostle through the crowd. After his package had passed the inspection of several parties, he would gain possession of it. A very tasty and commodious office room is now provided from which a large mail is distributed daily.

In addition to the institutions especially enumerated, Oswego contains the following: 4 drug stores, 5 dry goods stores, 12 groceries, 2 photograph galleries, 11 physicians, 12 lawyers, 4 hardware stores, 9 hotels, 1 marble monument factory, 1 pork packing establishment, 1 furniture factory, 3 saw mills, 5 loan and insurance offices, 3 furniture stores, 2 agricultural implement dealers, 4 livery stables, 5 blacksmith shops, 1 public reading room and library, 2 jewelry stores, 2 book stores, 1 patent medicine factory, 5 grain dealers, and a population of about 3.500.

SCHOOLS, CHURCHES AND SOCIETIES.

The first school taught in the county was that at Oswego in 1867, by Mrs. Herbaugh, and was kept in a small log house which stood in the south part of the town. The building had no floor except the earth, and the seats were rough planks resting upon large stones. The school furniture, however, was soon improved by having holes bored in the planks, and legs inserted, thus affording the excellence of benches. The district was not officially organized, and was formed and supported among the citizens by individual contribution. A school district, also the first in the county, was organized soon after the election of J. S. Newlon as County Superintendent, and a school building was erected. It was a small frame structure, and after the erection of the stone schoolhouse, the old frame was donated to the county for a courthouse. This stone house is a substantial two-story building, containing four rooms, two in the upper and two in the lower story. This building also soon became insufficient for the accommodation of the schools, and several of the departments found accommodation in buildings rented from private parties. In the summer of 1882 work upon the erection of a new building began, and was completed in the fall of the same year. It is a large, two-story brick structure seventy-two feet long by seventy feet wide, containing eight large rooms, and costing about $12,000. The grading of the schools began in 1871. It has since been undergoing improvement, until at present they are under a thorough and most complete system.

The school population of the city is 814, while the enrollment is 695, and the average daily attendance 39[illegible], under charge of a superintendent and eight efficient teachers, namely: M. Chidister, superintendent; O. R. Bellamy, Minnie Cunningham, Ida Mark, Sarah Crane, Hattie Smith, Kate Clover and Jennie King, teachers.

The first regular gospel messenger sent to minister unto the people of Oswego was Rev. T. H. Canfield, a Congregationalist, who was sent out by the American Home Missionary Society. There had, however, been heralders of the gospel among the settlers as early as 1858. Foot prints of a missionary named J. P. Barnaby, a Southern Methodist, are still traceable. He was succeeded by J. E. Ryan, who organized or established a large circuit including Labette County within its limits. Various missionaries had temporarily visited the opening fields and planted the gospel banner, but nothing was permanent until the advent of Mr. Canfield in 1867. The first religious services were conducted in dwellings and such places as could be found convenient.

The First Congregational Church, through the efforts of Rev. Mr. Canfield, was organized in Oswego, December 1867, the first officers being elected May 10, 1868. The church edifice, a small stone house, was erected in 1869 as the first in the town, the money being raised by subscription, the building costing about $1,100. There is a present membership of thirty-five. The church has been without a regular pastor since the resignation of Rev. E. F. Smith, in August, 1882.

The Presbyterian Church was formed July 28, 1868, through the special efforts of Rev. C. V. Morfort, who was the first minister of this denomination to preach in the town, having delivered a sermon on the fourth Sunday in April, 1868. The church house was built in 1873, and dedicated in December of that year, and is a small frame structure. The congregation, numbering about forty members, is under the charge of Rev. John Elliott as pastor.

The Baptists of Oswego met in the courthouse April 29, 1869, and under the direction of Revs. F. L. Walker, F. Clark and C. A. Bateman, an organization into a church body was effected. Rev. F. Clark was moderator. The society was incorporated May 31, 1870, with a membership of seventeen. The church was erected in the summer of 1873, and dedicated on the second Sunday in August of that year. There are now 126 members, and Rev. C. T. Daniel is pastor.

The Christian Church was established in Oswego in 1874 under the direction of Elder J. W. Randall, with fifteen members. A building was erected in 1879. It is a one-story frame. The congregation now has a membership of ninety, and the pastor is the Rev. T. E. Shepherd.

The Catholic Church organized a society in 1878, among a following of three families under Father Bonanzini. The church structure, a small frame, was built the same year costing about $1,000. The membership has increased to twenty-five families, and is under the spiritual guidance of Father Haspenthal.

The First Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in February, 1868, by Rev. J. Mark, with a membership of about twelve. The first missionary work done in the county was by preachers of this denomination, as early as 1858. The church building, a one-story frame house, 40x60 feet, was erected in 1870, at a cost of about $4,000. The congregation has flourished since its organization, now having a membership of 125, with Rev. H. McBirney, pastor.

The Second Methodist Episcopal Church was established in 1880 by the colored people of the city. An old store building was procured and fitted up for church uses. Rev. D. Ross is pastor. There is also the African M. E. Church, composed of colored people, of which Rev. J. Brewer is pastor. Also a colored Baptist Church, with Rev. A. W. Green, pastor.

The social fraternities are represented in four large and liberally supported lodges. These are the Adams lodge, A., F. & A. M., the Royal Arch Chapter, the Commandery, and the Oswego Lodge of Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

The Adams Lodge, No. 63, A. F. & A. M., was instituted October 20, 1868, with H. C. Bridgeman as worthy master; F. D. Howe, senior warden, and W. S. Newlon, junior warden. The lodge has experienced extensive growth, now having a membership of 100. The present officers are H. C. Cook, worthy master; J. C. Patterson, senior warden; M. S. Douglass, junior warden; J. M. Bowman, secretary, and J. B. Montgomery, treasurer. A large hall was built in 1879, which is handsomely fitted up for a lodge room.

Oswego Chapter, No. 15, F. A. M., was instituted October 19, 1869. W. S. Newlon was elected high priest; C. Montague, king, and D. W. Clover, scribe. J. W. Wier is high priest, and J. A. Gates, recorder.

The Commandery was instituted in August, 1874, with F. A. Bettis, eminent commander. From a few members in the beginning, the order has largely increased, now having a membership of forty-eight. The present officers are: H. C. Cook, eminent commander; J. A. Gates, generalissimo, and H. S. Coley, captain general.

The Order of the Eastern Star was formed February 27, 1873, by a number of ladies and gentlemen of the city of Oswego. John T. Keller was chosen worthy patron; Amanda M. Keller, worthy matron, and Martha A. E. Alexander, assistant matron.

Oswego Lodge, No. 36, I. O. O. F., was instituted June 5, 1868, with the following charter members: J. G. Cowell, N. D. Tower, T. H. Canfield, S. S. Smith, D. W. Clover, J. Jones and S. S. Smedley. The present officers of the lodge are R. P. Smith, noble grand; A. Ball, vice grand; F. W. Felt, secretary, and J. W. McNamar, treasurer.

The Oswego Literary Association was organized December 20, 1877. On the 5th of January, 1878, organization was effected by the following named persons: C. O. Perkins, B. F. Hobart, Nelson Case, C. L. Wyman, M. Reed, F. H. Atchison, F. Boyle, J. B. Hoover, S. L. Coulter, R. Nixon, W. S. Newlon, Mary A. Higbey, F. B. McGill. Articles of association having been filed with the Secretary of State, December 24, 1877, and incorporation secured, a capital stock of $1,000 was announced, and 1,000 shares issued, 420 of which were distributed among 108 certificate-holders. The fund has been kept at 12 per cent interest. In 1882, the total receipts were $714.17; expenses, $189.10. The library is small, but a reading-room is maintained, and made the principal feature of this commendable enterprise. Additions to the lists are gradually being secured.

THE PRESS, BANKS AND MANUFACTURES.

The Oswego Register was the first paper published in Oswego. It was established in 1868 by E. R. Trask. The paper passed through several hands, and then passed away. At different times it was edited by Clover & McGill, Bishop & Crum, Perkins & Crum, J. Shorten, and Trask & Newlon. There are at present three papers in successful operation, the Republican, Democrat and Independent. The publication of the Republican was begun August 5, 1881, by H. H. Brookes and I. W. Patrick. In August, 1882, Patrick bought Brookes' interest and became sole editor and proprietor. The paper was started both as a daily and weekly, as it has since continued, and is Republican in politics.

The Labette County Democrat, published at Oswego, was established in 1879, its first issue having been made on October 16th, of that year. It has now entered on its fourth volume. It was founded by Messrs. King, Capell & Frye, but for the past two years has been under the proprietorship of G. S. King who has had editorial charge of the paper since its commencement. Being the only Democratic paper in the county, it enjoys a large patronage from members of that party, and has a large subscription list, being a live and interesting paper, alive to all important issues.

The Oswego Independent was established January 15, 1872, by F. P. McGill, as a Republican journal. In the spring of 1879 it came under the proprietorship and management of Mrs. Mary McGill, her husband being deceased, and is edited conjointly by J. S. Waters and J. E. Bryan. The daily, an eight column folio, was added in the fall of 1881. The Enterprise enjoys a gratifying degree of prosperity, being liberally patronized by a large number of readers of all political creeds.

Banks.—Oswego contains two monetary institutions as banks of deposit, each of which is on a solid financial basis. C. M. Condon's banking house was established in 1870, by B. F. Hobart and H. R. Taylor. In 1872, J. C. Longwell bought Taylor's share and became part owner. In 1875, it belonged to Hobart alone, and in the following year, C. M. Condon became a partner, the firm being Hobart & Condon; and in 1882, C. M. Condon became sole proprietor. It is a private bank, and has a capital of $100,000. The banking house was erected in 1880.

The banking house of Marley & Marley was established as a private institution, December 13, 1880, with a capital of $50,000, by H. A. and J. W. Marley. Prior to the establishing of the bank, the firm had been engaged in the discount and loaning business.

The Oswego Manufacturing Company was established at Oswego, in 1876, by James Pierson and M. S. Douglass, as a planing mill and manufactory of various kinds of woodwork. The establishment passed through the hands of several parties, and is now owned by F. Jarnett, D. Goff and C. C. Clover. The building is two-story in the main, with shed additions, the whole measuring sixty-four feet in length, by fifty-five in width. The addition of a corn grinder was made to the machinery, in the fall of 1882. The entire enterprise employs five men, and represents a capital of $7,000.

The Oswego Flouring Mills were built in 1870, by Joseph Macon & Co. After passing through several hands, it came into the possession of H. G. Miller and his son, S. R. Miller, in July, 1878. The building is a two-story frame, 30x60 feet, with a shed addition, 12x40 feet. The machinery has been refitted and is of the most improved patterns. Three run of buhrs are used, with a capacity of one hundred barrels per day, and the power is a forty horse-power engine.

The Oswego Wagon Manufactory was established May 1, 1882, by John Shotliff, for the making of the Oswego wagon. The shop is a one-story brick, 50x100 feet, adjoining which is a two-story brick building, 35x80 feet, the upper story of which is used as a paint shop, and the lower as a wareroom. A force of twelve first-class workmen is employed, the enterprise representing an investment of about $10,000. The aim is to turn out only the best class of work, and the shops are constructed with the view of manufacturing about five hundred wagons per year.

The Neosho River Flouring Mills were built in 1871, by R. Howell and N. W. Rathbun. In the fall of 1872, H. C. Hall purchased Rathbun's interest, the firm now being Howell & Hall. The mill building is forty feet square, two stories high, and is constructed of walnut lumber throughout. The mill contains four run of buhrs, with a capacity of 100 barrels of flour per day.

The power is derived from a dam which is solidly built across the Neosho River with a nine-foot head upon two turbine water wheels. All the machinery is of the latest improvements, having been thoroughly refitted. Steam power was added in the spring of 1875, when the water race was being rebuilt and repaired, but was only used until that was completed, the supply of water continuing throughout the entire year.

The Oswego Valley Flouring Mills were started in December, 1881, by G. W. Bird & Co. The mills are under the special management of Bird, the other members of the firm being residents of Galveston, Texas. The mill building is a six-story brick, 50x70 feet in dimensions, contains six run of buhrs, three pairs of steel rollers, and is fitted up with the best of mill machinery, and is propelled by an eighty horse-power engine. Two straight grades and one patent grade of flour are made, the mill having a capacity for turning out three hundred barrels of flour per day. All the goods manufactured are shipped to the Texas markets.

In September, 1882, H. C. Draper began the manufacture of roofing and drain tile and brick. His enterprise, although of recent origin, is the most extensive of the kind in the State, and arrangements are being made to open the works on a larger scale during the coming spring.

WOODFORD, cigar manufacturer, was born near Sharon, Morgan Co., Ohio, December 25, 1839, and lived there until 1855, then moved to Drakeville, Davis Co., Iowa, that being his home until he came to Kansas in November, 1867, locating in Montana Township, Labette County, where he lived until February, 1869, when he located in Oswego, engaging in the grocery trade here, which he continued until 1874, afterward for five years he was in the wholesale liquor business. In 1880 he conducted the dining hall at the San Francisco & St. Louis depot. At this point and in 1881 he engaged in his present business, manufacturing cigars and dealing in tobacco and smokers' goods. He has served six years as Alderman of the First ward, and is also serving a third year as under Sheriff of Labette County. He is a member of the A. O. U. W., G. A. R., and Excelsior Fire Company. In July, 1861, he enlisted in Company A, Third Iowa Cavalry. He was on detached duty, serving as foraging master until July, 1862, afterward mail and despatch bearer and agency aid for the Governor, being in the service until September, 1864. He was married at Drakeville, Iowa, July 9, 1861, to Caroline M. Blankinship, a native of Davis County, Iowa, she being the first white child born in that county. They have five children, Charles D. Martha, Eva, Willard A., Jesse Grant, and Harry Wright.

C. E. WOODEN, proprietor Southside Hotel, was born 1836, in Huron County, Ohio. His grandfather came from England to Dutchess County, N. Y., about the time of the Revolution. His father died in Ohio, in 1882. His mother is still living in Oswego, Kas. Mr. Wooden lived in his native State until 1869, when he emigrated to Kansas, settling in Labette County on a farm west of Oswego. In 1878 he moved into the town, where he was elected Marshal of the city, which position he filled one and one-half years. He was also elected to the office of Street Commissioner one year. He was appointed to take charge of the county jail. In the spring of 1882 he took charge of the Southside Hotel. Mr. W. was married on October 2, 1861, to Sally Ann Pancost, of Huron County, Ohio. She was born in 1840, in the same State. They have five children, Jennie, Arnold, Belle, Eddie and Ella. Mr. Wooden's house is pleasantly located, the table good, and charges moderate. He is a member of the A. O. U. W. Society.

S. N. WOODRUFF, farmer, southeast quarter Section 16, P. O. Oswego, was born near Mansfield, Richland Co., Ohio, in [illegible]. After completing his education at the common schools he worked on the farm until 1848, when he removed to Noble County, Ind., near Albion, where he resided until October, 1881, when he emigrated to Kansas, settling in Labette County, and purchased 160 acres of land near Oswego, where he has erected a beautiful home. Mr. Woodruff's grandfather came from England just before the War of the Revolution and was a soldier in that from its commencement until its close. He died in New York at the age of ninety-one. Samuel Woodruff, his father, came from Connecticut to New York, and from thence to Ohio, at an early day. Afterward he moved to Indiana and died there at the advanced age of ninety-three. Enos Barnes, a soldier of the Revolution, was his maternal ancestor. Mr. W. was married in 1848 to Ellen Douglas, of Richland County, Ohio, by whom he had three children, Morris, died December 19, 1851, Lucy, married to Dr. Cazier, and living in Burlingame, Kas.; Albert, who died February 11, 1853. Mrs. W. died in 1852. Mr. W. married Sarah M. Douglass May 8, 1856, a sister of the former, by whom he had four children, Ellen C., Flora B. now married to Charles M. Clapp, a noted banker of Indiana, Charles B. and Inez, now deceased. His second wife died August 23, 1873. Mr. Woodruff married Mrs. E. Myers November 25, 1875. She was born in 1833, in Huron County, Ohio, and educated at Albion, Ind. Her father's name was James Skinner, one of the first settlers of Noble County, Ind., and died in 1874. Mrs. W. has two brothers, Alfred and Harrison living not far from Oswego. Mrs. Woodruff had five children by her first husband, Julius, who died in 1875; W. D. Myers, a merchant tailor in Albion, Ind.; Webster D. Myers with his brother in the same occupation at Emporia, Kas.; Clara B. Myers, living with her parents. Mr. Woodruff and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

R. W. WRIGHT, M. D. proprietor of the Pioneer Drug Store, Oswego, Kansas, was born in Millington, Yorkshire, England, December 25, 1824, and came with his father, William Wright, to America, when fourteen years of age; first settled in Burtonsville on the old Escohara Creek, Montgomery Co., N. Y., then moved to Bellona, Yates Co., N. Y., and worked for Henry Coleman for five years; at twenty-one read medicine in Penn Yan, N. Y., with Dr. D. R. Gerow; attended medical lectures in Geneva, N. Y. In the spring of 1848, he married Lota A. Whaite, in the town of Abington, Luzerne Co., Pa., and the same year emigrated West, and located in Emerald Grove, near Janesville, Wis., remaining there until the spring of 1850, when he moved to Iowa, and became one of the first settlers of Independence. In July, 1861, he raised a company and enlisted as a private soldier in the same company for three years; was detailed to take charge of the Hospital at Franklin, Mo. In the winter of 1861-62 and after the battle of Pea Ridge, Ark., was promoted to Captain of Company C, Ninth Iowa Volunteer Infantry; after the Battle of Vicksburg, he was appointed Recruiting Agent by the Government, for the Dubuque District of Iowa, and held that position until the close of the war. In 1865, after an absence of twenty-eight years, he visited his old home in England; returning he located temporarily in Springfield, Mo., until the summer of 1867, and in July of that year he located at Oswego, Kan., and was one of the original members of the Town Company and built the first frame house July 20, 1867. It was a building 16x24, with a side shed which served as store and residence. I was built on the corner diagonally from the old Oswego House, which was afterwards removed to give place to Capt. Parker's late residence. He carried on the drug and grocery business, and his was the Pioneer Drug House. He was a member of the Town Company until it was disolved, in 1881, and was the first Secretary of the same. He was elected as Estate Railroad Assessor for three years, and served as a member of the Legislature, being the member who introduced the first resolution providing for an appropriate representation of the products of Kansas, at the great World's Centennial Exhibition which was held at Philadelphia, in 1876. It was only after a most persistent fight that the passage of the bill appropriating $25,000 for the exhibition was secured, resulting in the greatest benefit to the State, Kansas being able to make one of the most magnificent exhibits of any State in the Union. Gov. Osborn recognizing the credit that was due to Mr. Wright for the interest he had taken in his endeavor to have the products of this State prominently brought before the people of the world, at once appointed him as one of the Centennial Managers to the exhibition of Kansas, at the great World's Exhibition at Philadelphia in 1876. He has served three terms as Mayor of the city of Oswego, and has held various other offices. He has been prominently identified with all the railroads in southeastern Kansas, which would be likely to benefit that region; he was instrumental in securing the M. K. & T. R. R. to Oswego, and was the originator and the president of the Spring Valley & Southern Kansas Railroad, which afterwards was called the Memphis Carthage & Northwestern Railroad, and was vice president and one of the directors until the road was graded to Oswego; he also was the father of Independence, Kan., by organizing the Town Company and laying out the town in August 1869, in the county of Montgomery, Kan. He named the town in honor of his old home in Iowa. He was also elected president of the Kansas State Medical Association, and is now a member of that society. The doctor has spent the last two years in California, but has now returned and settled permanently in his old home, Oswego, Kansas.

CHETOPA.

Chetopa is situated near the southeast corner of Labette County, on the Neosho River, and on the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad. The land selected for the town site had been taken by Dr. George Lisle, as a claim, as early as 1858. The settlement, in this part of the county, dates from January, 1857. At this date a society known as the Powhattan Agricultural Association was formed at Powhattan, Ohio, composed of ten members, the object of which was to establish a colony somewhere in Southeastern Kansas. Dr. George Lisle was made president of the association, and William Doudna, secretary. A committee of three, composed of G. Lisle, G. Ewers, and S. Steel, was sent to look up a location, with instructions to visit the Neosho Valley. The committee left Ohio April 1, 1857, and after looking about for awhile, reached the spot on which Chetopa stands on the 17th day of that month. The beauty and fertility of the country was apparent, and the party were satisfied that no better place could be found, and concluded to select this for the location of the colony. Dr. Lisle went back to Ohio and reported progress, and on the first of November, returned to this Eden with his family, and in May, 1858, staked off his claim which is now the site of Chetopa. The first spring he broke ten acres and planted it to corn, and in the following spring he broke as much more ground, and planted the whole to this crop. The new colony was flourishing, undisturbed by any cause whatsoever, idly dreaming of the future greatness of their new lands. The civil war broke out, and its devastations reached the homes of these colonists and almost wholly destroyed them.

There were many here of both whites and Indians that were adherents of the Southern cause, to which they rendered as much aid as lay in their power. One or more bands of guerrillas were formed to fight the battles of the South, and protect those whose opinions varied from those of the now somewhat tyrannical Northern men, who, in such times, would trample upon those who happened not to have opinions agreeing with their own. These bands committed many brutal acts of bloodshed and conflagration, against the advice and counsel of the wiser and more prominent of their number. Mathes, who had been a trader at Oswego from an early date, is charged with being the leader of these bands and guilty of their acts. But the better authority proves that Mathes was a civil, whole-souled man, who counseled against such proceedings, and that whatever acts of atrocity were perpetrated upon Union men in this section were against his protests and without his aid or assistance. Mathes was a Virginian by birth and rearing, and it is said that he possessed the genial hospitality characteristic of the people of that State. That his store door stood open to settlers at all times, who, when sick, could here obtain provisions without money and without price. There were, however, many acts of brutality committed by the Southern allies in this section, which unjustly were charged to Mathes. A pursuit was made upon these marauders by a body of Union troops, under Col. Blunt, and Mathes, who held a commission as Colonel in the rebel army, was overtaken a short distance below Chetopa, shot and killed. In November, 1863 Capt. Willetts, of the Fourteenth Kansas, invaded this country, and, under order of Gen. Ewing, burned houses, property, etc., so as to prevent their falling into the hands of the rebel army. Dr. Lisle's houses and property were destroyed, among which was a fine medical library and case of instruments. About forty houses were burned near Chetopa. This devastation of the country annihilated the settlement for a time, most all having left for more secure quarters, others entering the armies of either the North or South, while some fell victims to this difference of opinion upon the threshold of their own homes.

The war being ended and peace restored, those who had left their homes in this wilderness, as it were, returned to them, in the hope of restoring what had been uselessly destroyed. They were followed by many others, and the work of improvement and settlement went on anew.

In December, 1866, W. Doudna brought a saw mill to Chetopa, which was set up in the following February, by W. H. Reed, and thus the supply of building material became more abundant, and the work of building became easier and more rapid than before, when lumber was made by the slow and laborious use of the whip-saw.

The first meeting of the Chetopa Town Company, was held at Humboldt, Kan., January 22, 1868; George Lisle was president; W. Doudna, secretary and George Hanson, treasurer. The claim belonging to George Lisle was selected as the town site. The charter for the town was obtained from the Secretary of State, March 23, 1868. The town was now laid off and the sale of lots and building began. The first building erected upon the site, after it was laid off, was a house built by George Hanson, for Perry Barnes, which he ran under the name of the Western Hotel, as a public house. In June, M. H. Dersham erected a house and opened a stock of drugs. In the following September, C. P. Spaulding completed a large house and hall, and in January, of the next year, Herman Brothers established a grocery business. John Reed opened a dry goods store, August 4, 1869, and in September, 1869, B. A. Aldrich began in the hardware trade. The growth of the town was comparatively slow until the rumor of railroad building became noised abroad. A meeting of the citizens of the town was held in Spaulding's Hall, February 12, 1870, at which they pledged bonds to the amount of $50,000.00 to the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad, in order that they might secure the line of that road through the town; and at a meeting held February 25, 1870, the contracts were signed by the authorities and all needful arrangement perfected, for the building of the road. The road was completed to the corporate limits of Chetopa in February, 1870, and reached the south line of the State June 8, 1870, which event was celebrated by speeches and other ceremonies.

Chetopa was to be the pet railroad town. Here was to be the junction of the Neosho Division, and the main line of this road; this was to be the terminus of a division of the road, and the shops were to be located here. The railroad officials owned large interests in the town site and were zealous in its building. The town became widely advertised, and everything looked to its onward march to greatness. Men seized on the prospect and business houses became established contemporaneously, and in immediate succession, large wholesale liquor and grocery houses were established, and the town in a short time had reached a population of about three thousand people, with a goodly number of business houses. Some difficulty arose between some of the domineering railroad magnates and parties interested in the town, and the former finding themselves unable to have all things their own way, withdrew all support from the town, and instead of fulfilling their promises as to certain enterprises which the town was to receive, went to Parsons and founded that place to which all advantages were taken instead of their going to Chetopa.

When this move was made, Chetopa fell like a crash. Hitherto, under the stimulus of the railroad company's promises, everything was at the highest pitch of excitement; business men opened houses on grand scales; costly and extravagant improvements were made upon the town; an elegant school building was erected costing about $24 000, and the city became heavily bonded, and men incurred indebtedness in the hope of paying out by means of the rush of trade which it was certain the town was to receive. No sooner had the railroad support been withdrawn, than the news fell like a blight over the town. Nearly all that had been done was now valueless, to a great measure. A majority of the population abandoned the town and property became a drug, so much so that lots and blocks sold for merely nominal sums, and the assessed valuation of all the property in the place, was less than the indebtedness of the town.

As an example of the extravagant notions of the success of the place may be mentioned, that in 1870, Shively & Ellis established a wholesale grocery house, and F. Fraunberg started a wholesale liquor house. The National hotel was built at a cost of $12,000. It was, too, the shipping point for the Texas and Indian cattle trade which also assisted to the temporary rush.

Marsh erected a fine brick block in 1871, and other expensive improvements were made. Although the town suffered severely from these reverses of fortune, yet the favorableness of the location in the midst of a fine agricultural country, and its nearness to the Indian Territory from which extensive trade is derived, were sufficient to prevent it from being entirely abandoned, and indeed sufficient to support a live and prosperous little city, despite the meanness of railroad officials to the contrary. The city now contains a population of about 1,500, with several manufacturing establishments, churches, schools, and many business houses engaged in the supply of a flourishing trade.

The first Fourth of July celebration was held in Chetopa, in 1867. John Secrest was orator, and J. A. Shoat marshal. A celebration was held on the same day of the next year. J. H. Crichton was orator, and speeches were made by various other parties. Father Moore delivered the prayer in the opening exercises. It was an extremely dry season, no rain having fallen in a good while. The venerable father prayed that the dry, parched earth might be refreshed with the moistening tears of heaven, and in the afternoon, as was generally observed as coincident with Father Moore's petition, a copious shower of rain fell, whether or not in answer to the faithful man's prayer does not appear.

The patriotism of the settlers again called them together on this memorable day, in 1869. Sydney Clark, member of Congress, was chief orator, and speeches were made by John Speer, Col. Hoyt, Rev. Mr. Bateman, T. D. McCue, J. H. Clark, and Ess-Teh-Roh-Ghers, a chief of the Osage nation. The celebration of this year was remarkable on account of the overflowed condition of the streams, the immense size of the assembled multitude, the barbecue and the speeches. An ox, for the barbecue, was furnished by Mrs. Grant, and 1.000 loaves of bread by Miller & Smith. The speeches of Messrs. Clark and Hoyt savored strongly of anti-monopoly sentiments, as also did that of the Osage chief. Indeed, the latter orator went to the extreme, and expressed his opposition not only to monopolies, but also to progress and improvements in general. He said he was opposed to railroads, because the sound of the whistle of the locomotive scared away the buffalo, and to saw-mills because they cut up the timber.

A stage line between Fort Scott and Chetopa was established October 18, 1869, on which stages plied weekly until, in December, they became tri-weekly.

The cemetery grounds of twenty acres, taken from Hard's claim, were purchased and laid off in October, 1869. The first child born in the town was Sarah Emma Reed, daughter of J. H. Reed, on October 23, 1867. On the 17th of September, a fire broke out accidentally, and consumed several buildings. Among them was Fisher & Sturgis' block. The loss was about $25.000. Another fire took place June 7, 1873, the loss amounting to $4.000; and in August, 1882, still another burning occurred, in which several good business houses were consumed; but the buildings are being rapidly replaced by new brick blocks. A hook-and-ladder company was organized June 24, 1871, and a fire company November, 11, 1874, with G. H. Bates, foreman, and W. Doudna, first assistant. On the 30th of September, 1873, the Hiatt boys, desperadoes and robbers, raided the town for purposes of plunder, but were met and repulsed by the citizens, and were driven back into the Territory.

At the election in February, 1871, Chetopa was a prominent candidate for the county seat of Labette County. There were four places voted upon, namely, Oswego, Chetopa, Labette City and the center of the county. The vote stood as follows: Labette City, 1.588; Oswego, 1,011; Chetopa, 887; centre of the county, 237. This election, however, resulted in no choice, no one place receiving a majority of all the votes cast.

Chetopa was chartered as a village, April 12, 1869. M. G. Pratt, W. Gage, Henry Lisle, Leander Brown, and A. S. Corey were elected trustees. In the following year, it became incorporated as a city of the third class, and at the first election for choosing city officers, on the 5th of April, 1870, F. M. Graham was elected Mayor; W. B. Gregory, C. H. Ludlow, W. A. Nix, G. A. Degraff and Dr. L. P. Patty, Councilmen.

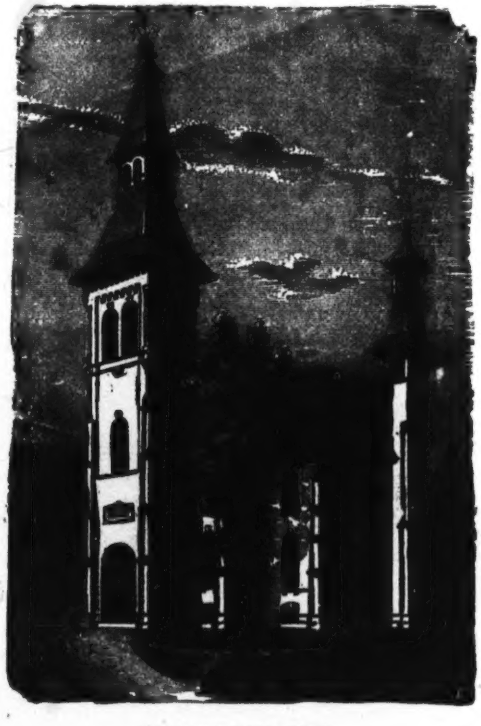
The present city officers are: J. B Cook, Mayor; George Eddington, Treasurer; A. G. Drake, Attorney, John W. Breidenthal, Clerk; J. P. Shields, Police Judge; S. B. Sleane and William Bently, Constables.

A petition signed by the citizens of Chetopa and vicinity, was sent to the postoffice department asking that a post office be located here to be called Chetopa, after the Osage Chief Chetopah. The office was established in 1860, with Dr. George Lisle as postmaster. The office was simply located and as yet no mail route was established by the Government, and the mail was obtained by a private carrier from the Quapaw Agency. The destruction of the settlements by the Rebellion, also suspended the post office, which became re-established in the early part of 1866, with Col. W. Doudna, postmaster; the business of the office commencing July 1, of that year. The mail was now obtained weekly from Humboldt. In January, 1870, Parker and Tisdale secured the contract for carrying the mails daily, between Girard and Chetopa, and when the M. K. & T. Railroad was completed, Chetopa obtained the most of the mail from that road, receiving mail from a few other points by stage. The office was made a money order office July 12, 1869, and the first order was issued to C A. Corey, July 23, 1869. In April, 1870, $850 was added to the salary of the postmaster. J. M. Cavaness, at present, holds the office of Postmaster

PUBLIC SCHOOLS, CHURCHES AND SOCIETIES.

The first school taught in the vicinity of Chetopa was that kept in a small log-house about a mile south of town, and taught by J. C. Henry. The house was built of logs which were hewn off after the building was put up, was covered with a shake-board roof, and was twenty-two feet square. This building served for both school and church meetings. The first school that was taught in the town was in the winter of 1867, by Ellen Craft, and was kept in a private dwelling that had been built by William Carico. A school house was built in 1870, a small frame 18 by 24 feet in size, and was dedicated February 3, 1870.

At a meeting of the school board on May 28, 1872, they decided to submit a proposition to the vote of the people, as to whether bonds should be voted to the amount of $25,000 for the erection of a new school building. It was flush times then with the city and the vote cast June 10, 1872, favored the issuance of the bonds. Work began upon the erection of the new house soon afterward, and the building was completed and dedicated with appropriate ceremonies on the 4th of July, 1873. The address was made by Col. J. W. Horner, and speeches were made by J. B. Cook, R. J. Elliott, A. H. Ayers and others. The building is a handsome three-story brick, constructed with artistic and appropriate projections, etc., and contains several fine large school rooms.



PUBLIC SCHOOL, CHETOPA.

The schools are thoroughly graded and afford efficient instruction. The school population of the city is 558, the enrollment 435, and the average daily attendance 275, under charge of five competent instructors, with J. W Weltner as principal.

The footprints of the itinerant in the region round about Chetopa are found dating back to the early part of 1858. It was then that the Rev. J. P. Barnaby preached to the settlers the gospel of truth. In the following October Mr. Barnaby was succeeded by Rev. J. E. Ryan, who organized an extensive circuit. This was the winnowing of the sparks that eventually were to ignite into the lambent flames of a Christian community.

No sooner had a sufficient number of settlers of any particular faith become located in the vicinity, than a church body was duly organized.

The Methodist Church was organized in June, 1868, with a membership of thirteen, and Rev. Thomas Palmer was pastor, who was succeeded in March, 1869, by Rev. P. McNutt. Work upon the erection of a church edifice began November 4, 1868, and was finished in July, 1870. The house was dedicated to purposes of spiritual services, September 4, 1870, and Rev. Dr. Bowman preached the dedicatory sermon, and was assisted in the ceremonies by Rev. Messrs. Lewis, Conley and Fox. The building is a large one-story stone, and cost $6,700. The church body was incorporated June 24, 1869. The present membership is 160, and Rev. A. P. George is pastor.

The Presbyterian Church was organized September 20, 1868, under Rev. C. H. McCreery, who has since continued pastor of the flock. The organization was effected with a membership of six; namely S. H. Carr, Mr. and Mrs. S. Cellers, Mrs. R. S. Lenhart, L. Billington and G. F. Smith. S. H. Carr and S. Cellars were elected elders. The present membership is 100. The foundation of the church building was laid in October, 1869, and the building was completed in July of the next year. It is a one-story frame, costing about $6,750. The house was dedicated August 28, 1870, by Rev. T. H. Hill, assisted by Rev. Messrs. McCreery and Lowry.

The United Presbyterian Church was established May 4, 1869, by Rev. E. C. Cooper. The first members were, Cranson, Charlotte and Elizabeth Taylor, Mrs. E. D. Butterworth, Mrs. E. J. McGaven, Edward and Rachel Johnston, J. A. and Maggie E. Endsley and George Butler. Cranson Taylor, J. A. Endsley, and E. Johnston were elected elders. Work upon the Church building was begun in September, 1870, and was completed in the following year. The dedication of the church took place October 29, 1871, and Rev. J. A. Herron preached the dedicatory sermon. The building is a fine, large, one-story brick, of costly appearance. The membership has increased to eighty, and Rev. J. D. Graham is pastor.

The Baptist Church was organized May 1, 1869, by Rev. A. C. Bateman, with eight members. The church building, costing $3,300, was erected during the spring and summer of 1870, and was dedicated August 14, of that year, by Rev. Ellis, assisted by Revs. McCreary, Lowry and Bateman, December 15, 1870. Rev. N. I. Rigby accepted the call as pastor of the church. The Baptist Association of ministers met in this church August 2, 1872. There is a present membership of fifty-nine, with Rev. Henry Ward, pastor.

The Episcopal Church was organized February 11, 1873. The church building was soon after erected, and is a neat frame structure. The membership at present is about forty-seven.

The Catholic Church was organized by Father Bononcini, with thirty families. Previous to this, however, Father Dougherty had held meetings in the neighborhood, but no body was formed. A building was purchased and fitted up for a place of worship. A parsonage building was erected in 1881, costing about $1,200. There is a present membership of fifty-five families under Rev. C. C. Hospenthal.

There is, also, a Colored Baptist Church, with Rev. A. W. Green, pastor; a Second Methodist Episcopal Church, composed of colored people, with Rev. A. Riley, pastor, and an African Methodist Episcopal Church, with Rev. Mr. Brewer, pastor.

The social fellowship of the citizens of Chetopa is amply cultivated in three large and liberally supported lodges.

The Chetopa Lodge, No. 73, A. F. & A. M. was instituted in 1870, with J. H. Crichton, worshipful master; J. R. Dow, senior warden; J. C. Watson, junior warden; W. Dowdles, treasurer; A. A. Case, secretary; E. B. Hayes, senior deacon; S. Rawson, junior deacon; J. C. Wilson, tyler. A celebration was held June 24, 1870. The present membership of the lodge is sixty, and James Brown is worshipful master, and E. W. Bedell, secretary.

Chetopa Lodge, No. 48, I. O. O. F., was instituted August 10, 1869, with the following charter members: J. C. Wright, W. A. Cannon, S. W. Frye, W. H. Gage, Lee Brown, S. Rawson, J. M. Ridenour and James Cuism. A celebration was held July 4, 1869, at which speeches were made by A. H. Ayres, J. S. Ritter, J. Secrest, J. H. Hibbets and others. An anniversary was held April 26, 1872, and speeches were made by Rev. G. W. Pye, F. A. Bettis, J. W. Horner, J. S. Ritter, etc. The lodge has a present membership of thirty-eight, with G. C. Ward, noble grand; C. M. Fry, vice grand; S. T. Herman, secretary, and O. St. John, treasurer.

Chetopa Lodge, No. 27, A. O. U. W., was instituted December 10, 1879, with twenty-one members. J. B. Cook was chosen master workman; E. W. Bedell, foreman; L. M. Thompson, overseer; Joseph Craft, guide, and O. St. John, recorder. The present membership is seventy-five, and at the election of officers held June 29, 1882, J. W. Bradenthal was chosen master workman; S. Lyon, foreman; J. N. Anderson, overseer, and O. St. John, recorder.

THE PRESS, BANKS AND MANUFACTURES.

Several attempts have been made to establish newspaper publications at Chetopa, only one of which still continues in successful operation. The Advance was established in 1876, the Southern Kansas Immigrant on July 30, 1874, by J. B. Cook & Co.; the Democrat May 1, 1872, and which survived until the 15th of the November following; the Herald on March 4, 1876, by Capt. Hibbets and F. W. Frye, which has also been discontinued. The Advance was first published at Paola. In January, 1869, it was removed to Chetopa by A. S. Corey, the proprietor, and was edited by J. W. Horner, who became proprietor of the concern June 1, 1869. In the April previous the size of the paper was increased by adding one column to each page, and on January 5, 1869, was enlarged to an eight column folio, and the name changed to that of the Southern Kansas Advance. J. M. Cavaness was made foreman of the office July 1, 1869. S. A. Fitch purchased a half interest in the paper January 5, 1870, and retired from the business the following August. J. M. Cavaness became business manager, January 1, 1871, and one year following purchased a half interest with J. W. Horner. On February 22, 1875, J. M. WILLIAM ALEXANDER, tonsorial artist and dealer in live stock, was born in Randolph County, Ind., in 1837. His mother, formerly Rosana Hawk, was born in Georgia. She lived several years in Alabama on the Cherokee reservation, when her father Charles Hawk, with his family, moved north to Ohio. Mr. Alexander's father, John Alexander, was a native of Virginia and also of Indian descent. William Alexander was left upon his own resources when quite young by the death of his mother, who was his main support, and at about the age of thirteen he went to Canada, where he spent a year with the Chippewas. He then returned to Indiana and learned the barbers' trade, and at the age of twenty he went to Wisconsin and spent two years in the Fox River country. He then spent a year in Illinois, and afterwards a year in Ohio, after which he located in Knightstown, Ind., where he was reputably identified with his profession for several years. In 1870 he left there and came here and located, where he has successfully carried on his profession since, meantime operating in stock dealing, and has been an active operator in lumber milling in the Nation. He married, in 1864, Miss Mary E. Brown, of North Carolina, and of the descent of the Cherokees of that State. They have a family of two sons and one daughter, Thaddeus Guerney, George Willie and Nellie. He and his family are members of the Presbyterian church. A part of this period of time he was engaged in working at the carpenter's trade. His father owned a set of carpenter's tools and the son always was allowed the use of them from the time he could handle them, and by this mode cultivated a taste for and seemed to possess a natural talent for mechanical work. He was wounded slightly three times in his first engagement at Pea Ridge, Ark., and had his gun stock split into innumerable splinters by the bursting of a shell; at the time he was lying on his side and loading, the shell striking the gun immediately over his left foot, thereby saving that useful member to a soldier. He passed all other actions without damage. His first year was spent in Missouri and Arkansas, under Fremont and Curtis, marching through and reaching the Mississippi River at Helena, Ark., July, 1862. When Grant commenced his operations toward Vicksburg, the Fourth Iowa was assigned to the First Division of the Fifteenth Army Corps, Army of Department of Tennessee, and it retained its position till the close of the war. MOUND VALLEY.

Mound Valley is located in the western part of Labette County, about the the center of the county from north to south, and in the valley of Pumpkin Creek. To the north, east and south of the town, the country is comparatively level, while to the west are found ranges of mound like hills, from which the valley and town were named.

The town was laid out in the spring of 1869, by the Mound Valley Town Company, of which William Rogers was president. The section of land selected by the company for a town site, was claimed by the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad Company under a treaty claimed to have been made by that company with the Indians; this company claiming all odd numbered sections and the Leavenworth, Lawrence & Galveston Railroad claiming the even numbered sections. The matter was contested in the courts for some years, and, in 1876, a decision was rendered against the railroads and in favor of the settlers, the land being declared subject to entry. The town had already been begun and contained a few buildings, but as yet the title was imperfect. As soon as, or shortly after, the decision of the Supreme Court was rendered, the Probate Judge of the County, deeded the land for the Town Company, as required by the laws of the State, and appointed a commission to divide the land into severalty among the various owners or claimants. In this way, the title to the site became settled and the respective stockholders of the Town Company, received each his proper share.

The first house erected on the site was a storehouse by A. Honrath and H. Roar, which they occupied with a general stock of goods, for about six years, when it was burned. This building was erected directly after the site was selected and laid off into town lots. Following this, John P. Kremer started a grocery, L. F. Nicholas a drug store, and later in 1872, Dr. E. Tanner and M. Anderson a general store. In the next year, R. Blakely started a grocery store. Prior to this, and in 1870, J. Campbell erected a hotel called the Mound Valley Hotel, and later in the year, L. F. Nicholas erected the Nicholas Hotel.

Owing largely to the dispute of title, the town made but little progress until the completion of the St. Louis and San Francisco railroad in August 1879, upon which the town is situated.

Prior to this date the town contained four stores, two hotels, a few residences and a population of about forty.

The building of the railroad had the effect to stimulate the building of the town to some extent, but it was not until about a year and a half following its completion that rapid progress began, so that within the past eighteen months, the greatest and most rapid growth has taken place. The place now contains six general stores, two grocery, two hardware, two drug, a furniture and two millinery stores; a saddle and harness, three carpenter, two blacksmith and wagon shops; three hotels, a restaurant, three loan offices, five doctors, three lawyers, and a population of about five hundred, and withal is a thriving young town filled with industrious, intelligent and enterprising people.

A post office was established here in 1870, with A. Honrath as Postmaster, who kept the office in his store room. The mail was obtained from Oswego, by a post-horse route. In 1876, a stage line was run from Oswego by which the mail was brought. The office since the beginning has been held respectively by A. Honrath, L. Slocum, M. Anderson, R. Blakely and Dr. N. M. Miller, the present incumbent.

LOCAL MATTERS.

The first school taught in Mound Valley was a subscription school, taught by Mrs. William Robins, in the winter of 1870. A school building was erected in the summer of 1871, and was a one-story frame, 23x30 feet, and cost $1,000, for the erection of which bonds were issued by the district, to the amount of $1,200, which sold for seventy-five cents on the dollar. A new frame school building was erected in the fall of 1882, at a cost of $2,000 and is thirty-six feet square with an approach twelve by sixteen feet, upon which a belfry is constructed, and is two stories high, containing three rooms. The old building was sold to W. O'Brien for $150. For the defrayal of the cost of the new house the district voted $1,625 in bonds, and levied a special tax on the property within the district for the balance.

The school population, from the fifteen pupils that attended the first school taught in the town, has increased to 184. The schools are partially graded and are under charge of E. H. Barnhart, as Principal, and Misses Ida Barnhart and Emma Huland, as teachers.

The Church of Christ was established in the vicinity of Mound Valley in May, 1871, with fourteen members, by Rev. J. W. Randall, and was effected in the residence of E. Stapleton. The meetings were then changed to the Union schoolhouse, and then to Mound Valley. For some cause the congregation became in a measure disorganized and broken up, but in March, 1882, a revival was made under the administration of Rev. J. Padget, and has since witnessed a healthy and prosperous existence. The first meetings in the town were held in the schoolhouse, then in the Baptist Church. In the summer of 1882, a house was erected and is thirty-six by fifty feet, one story frame, and cost about $1,500.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in March, 1880, with only ten members. Although this denomination had labored in this section long prior to this time, yet no individual organization had been effected in the town. It was organized by Rev. E. A. Graham, the present pastor of the church, and is one of the four points within his circuit, which includes also Hopewell, where a new church was built in 1881, Pleasant Hill and Altamont. The old schoolhouse was used as a place of worship until the erection of the church house in the summer of 1880, which was dedicated in September of that year by Rev. A. T. Burris, assisted by Revs. Graham and Poinsett. The church is a one-story frame, twenty-four by forty-four feet, and cost $1,000. A comfortable parsonage was begun in 1879, and completed in 1882, costing about $700. The congregation has prospered since the beginning and now has a membership of one hundred.

Mound Valley contains three flourishing societies. These are the Masonic, the Order of United Workmen, and the Grand Army of the Republic.

Mound Valley Lodge, No. 61, A. O. U. W., was instituted October 9, 1880. The first officers were: J. J. Decker, past master workman, I. J. Stevens, master workman; H. F. Melhuist, general foreman; T. A. Millard, financier; and George Campbell, recorder. The Lodge has grown from the nineteen members with which it organized, to the present number of twenty-seven. The present officers are: J. J. Decker, M. W.; H. F. Melhuist, R.; A. Pattison, Rec.; and A. B. Hammar, Fin.

The Mound Valley Post, No. 138, G. A. R., was instituted November 8, 1882, with J. Moore, commander; R. Blakely, adjutant. The organization was effected with a membership of twenty-four.

The Mound Valley Lodge, A., F. & A. M., was instituted under a dispensation, May 18, 1882, with D. L. Swan, worshipful master; J. Moore, secretary, and W. Bird, treasurer. The society began with thirteen members, and now numbers nineteen.

Sun Light Lodge, No. 59, I. O. G. T., was organized October 18, 1877, with thirty-three members. R. R. Coleman was elected worthy chief templar; Ella Dunn, worthy secretary; K. R. Coleman, worthy treasurer. The lodge grew rapidly, its membership at one time reaching as high as seventy-five, but has since decreased, and is now about thirty. The present officers are: J. R. Monroe, worthy chief templar; D. S. Coleman, worthy secretary; William North, worthy treasurer.

Only one attempt, properly speaking, has been made toward the publication of a news journal in the town. In the spring of 1881, the Oswego Times Publishing Company printed a sheet for Mound Valley, but this lasted only a few months and gave out.

The Mound Valley Herald was established April 6, 1882, by G. Campbell, who, in the following September, sold out to C. L. Albion, the present editor and proprietor. The sheet is a seven-column folio, independent in politics, and has a circulation of 500 copies. It is a live and prosperous journal, and promises to become a permanent enterprise.

Mound Valley contains but one manufacturing establishment. This is a grist and flouring mill, which was built in 1881, by the firm of Harper, O'Brien & Hollingsworth. The mill building is a two-story frame, and contains three run of buhrs, and is propelled by steam power.

The future of the town of Mound Valley is to an extent flattering. The large scope of fine agricultural lands by which it is surrounded, which is yet susceptible of greater development, and from which extensive trade is derived; the thrift and enterprise characterizing the population, etc., go very far toward inciting the prediction of the future prominence and prosperity of the town.

MONTANA.

In January, 1866, a number of settlers in the vicinity formed themselves into a town company and founded the town of Montana. It is situated in the eastern part of Labette County, on the Neosho River, and about eight miles north of Oswego. Being in the valley of the Neosho, it is surrounded by a fertile agricultural country. As soon as the land came into market the site was entered as a claim and proved up by S. S. Watson, who also was president of the town company, and J. S. Waters, the secretary.

The first building erected on the site was a log store house, belonging to B. F. Simons, which he built in April of 1866, and began the sale of merchandise.

In March, 1867, V. and J. S. Anderson brought and set up a saw mill at the place. During that summer, E. H. Fagan built a room and opened the second store, and in the fall, H. M. Miner erected a hotel. The expectation of this being made the county seat was universally indulged, from which the growth became rapid and promising.

Montana at one time received a large vote for the seat of government, but failed to obtain the coveted prize, as they say, against the frauds practiced at Oswego.

An effort was made to secure the M., K. & T. Railroad through the town, in which they also failed, that road having been constructed to the west of the town about six miles, upon which Labette was founded as a rival, to which a large part of Montana was taken. The Memphis & Northwestern road was surveyed through the town and part of the road had been graded, and bridge abutments built upon the river, etc., but the company failed to complete the enterprise, which was finally abandoned, thus defeating again the sanguine hopes of the aspiring little village. A stage line from Fort Scott to Chetopa was established in 1869, by Capt. Terry & Son, and one from Osage Mission, forming a junction with the former at Montana. These were the only means of public communication.

The hope of securing a railroad had given an impetus to the progress of the town, so that as early as 1870, it numbered a population of about 800, with more than a dozen places of business. The signal failure to complete any of the enterprises which so stimulated its growth became the secret of its decay, and at present it contains a population of only about two hundred, with a post office, three stores, blacksmith shop, school and churches, a mill and a few residences.

An attempt was made in 1872, to organize a city government for the town, but was not perfected. The rough element by which the town was filled while the grading of the Memphis & Northwestern Road was going on, whose lawlessness was sought to be restrained, was the cause for which the organization was sought to be effected. But no organization of this sort was made, till in 1877, when the place became incorporated as a city of the third class, with J. J. Woods, Mayor, and A. B. Chapman, G. T. Peak, Samuel Ballentine, J. P. Bradfield and J. M. Mark, Council. This organization is still maintained, with J. J. Freeman as the present Mayor.

The post office was established at Montana in 1866. B. F. Simons held the commission of postmaster, and kept the office in his store room. A mail route from Lawrence to Oswego ran through the place, and mail was obtained weekly. At first it was a post horse route, until the stage line was established when the mail was brought by the stage. It is now obtained by a stage line, from Oswego.

Samuel Ballentine is the present Postmaster.

The first school was taught in the town in the spring of 1878, by Mary Biggs, and was kept in a little log house, which Simons had used for a store room. About thirty pupils attended at this time, while at present the school population is ninety-eight. A schoolhouse was built in 1870, and is a two-story frame structure, 40x24 feet, and cost $3,000

Montana has two church organizations. These are the Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal. The former was organized in 1877, by Rev. S. W. Griffin, who is the present pastor. Soon after the body became established, a church building was erected, and is a small frame house. A Methodist congregation was organized recently, of which Rev. Mr. Shambaugh is pastor, but no church house has yet been provided.

Only one secret organization has been effected at this place. The Evergreen Lodge, No. 86, of the Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons, was instituted in November, 1869, with eleven charter members. A. W. Swift was chosen worshipful master; J. S. Waters, senior warden; J. S. Anderson, junior warden; D. M. Watson, secretary. The present officers are J. S. Anderson, worshipful master; Uria Davis, senior warden; Thomas Wilson, junior warden; J. M. Mahr, secretary.

Montana has but one manufactory, a grist and flouring mill. This enterprise was begun in the fall of 1870 by W. E. Livesay and J. O. Charles, and is now owned and operated by Samuel Ballentine. The mill contains three run of buhrs, and has a capacity for grinding 250 bushels of wheat per day, and from which is turned out an excellent quality of flour. The mill building is a two-story frame, and the machinery is run by steam power.

Like many other of the smaller places in the county, Montana is overshadowed by the larger cities, and merely exists without making much progress, and the prospects for the future are by no means flattering or promising.

HON. J. S. WATERS, attorney and farmer, residence Section 21, Township 32, Range 21, Labette County. Mr. Waters was born in Warrick County, Ind., March 25, 1837. He was the eighth child and seventh son of William Waters, who was a native of Monroe County, N. Y., and who was a soldier under Gen. Scott (then Col. Scott) at the battles of Lundy's Lane, Chippewa and Bridgewater, in 1812 and 1813. His mother's maiden name was Rachel Cox, who was born in Canada. The subject of this sketch moved with his parents and elder brothers from his native State to Henry County, Iowa, in the year 1847, where he lived with his parents on a farm until 1849, when his mother died. This to some extent broke up the family, and two brothers went to California, and in the spring of 1850 two others went, thus scattering the family and leaving the youngest to maintain themselves. Young J. S. spent the few first years from that time in laboring by the month, driving oxen until the summer of 1853, when he went to Galesburg, Ill., and there engaged as apprentice to one D. M. Chapin, a saddler, where he served faithfully for nearly three years, receiving from Mr. Chapin very valuable lessons which created within him a desire for books, which he read and improved his many leisure moments to the improvement of his mind. After his term of service with Mr. Chapin was ended, he went to Burlington, Iowa, and worked for H. B. Ware (father of Senator Eugene Ware, of Fort Scott) for a few months, boarding in the family of Mr. Ware on South Hill, and to Mrs. H. B. Ware he feels indebted for her many acts of kindness and moral lessons taught. In 1857 he returned to his native county in the State of Indiana, and in the autumn of 1858 was a candidate for Representative in the State Legislature on the Republican ticket, which at that time was very unpopular in Southern Indiana. In 1860 he removed to the adjoining County (Spencer) carrying on his mechanical trade. There, in July, 1860, he married Miss S. M. Glenn. To their union were born three children, all of whom died, together with their mother, within two years. Soon Mr. Waters went to Nebraska City, where he engaged as local editor on a paper published by his brother, during which time he pursued the study of the law, which he had been casually doing for five years past. In 1865 he resolved to remove to a more congenial latitude, and learning of the Osage Treaty, he at once came to the Neosho Valley, where he located within two miles of his present home, in December, 1865, living alone, doing his own cooking and washing. At that time there was less than 100 white persons in the county. He was commissioned by Gov. Crawford Notary Public for Neosho County, in 1866, and upon the organization of Labette County he was commissioned for Labette County, being the first commission issued to any person in either county. Was admitted to the bar November, 1867, and in 1869 was elected County Attorney vice B. W. Perkins, resigned. In 1870 was re-elected for full term of two years. Had a large practice in his home courts, and perhaps did more land office practice at Humboldt than any other attorney not a resident of Humboldt. In 1876 was elected County Attorney again, and also re-elected in 1878. In 1880 was elected to the Legislature, and also re-elected in 1882, serving with some distinction on the Judiciary and Railroad Committees, as well as on some Conference Committees. In 1879 became editor of the Oswego Independent, and continued in that capacity until May, 1883, resigning his editorial chair to go to Harley, Idaho, where he takes charge of a U.S. land office, having been commissioned by President Arthur, Receiver for four years, beginning March 5, 1883. In May, 1882, Gov. St. John appointed Mr. Waters Director of the State Penitentiary, where he served with marked ability, and was, as such Director, complimented by Gov. Glick in his message in January, 1883. In March, 1879, he was married to Mrs Amy Myers, of Spencer County, Ind., an old acquaintance, by whom he has one child—a daughter, Maud, aged three years. Mrs. Waters' maiden name was Pitt. She was born in Spencer County, Ind., August, 1837. She is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Waters is a member of Evergreen Lodge, A., F. & A. M., at Montana, Kansas, and R. A. C. No. 15, Oswego, and Commandery No. 7, Oswego, Kansas. His landed estate where he lives is 565 acres, well improved. He lives a life of pleasure as well as usefulness, possessing the unbounded confidence of all his neighbors and acquaintances; is well and favorably known throughout the State as a political leader, having attended most of the State Conventions and other important political meetings in the State for the past ten years.

After the command he returned to St. Louis, and was mustered out November 26, 1864 and returned to Iowa. In 1865, Mr. Woods became editor of the Maquoketa, Iowa, Excelsior, and continued to edit it with a short intermission, until he removed to Kansas. LABETTE.

The village of Labette was laid off in May, 1870, by a town company composed of several of the citizens living in the vicinity, and railroad officers. W. J. Conner was made president of the company, and J. S. Waters secretary.

The town is situated in the eastern part of the county, on the line of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad, about midway between the cities of Oswego and Parsons.

Prior to the establishment of this town, an attempt had been made by some of the citizens in the vicinity, to start a town called Neola, about one and a half miles south of Labette. This attempt was made before the railroad was built and its being off from the road, was reason sufficient for its abandonment and the establishment in conjunction with the railroad officials, of Labette. The land selected for the site of the town, was owned as claims by R. Watson, Samuel Green, W. Cooper, and Mrs. Miller, and comprised an entire section.

The first house erected on the site, besides the claim houses, was that built by John Conner for a store room, in which he put a general stock of goods. The aid of the railroad company toward the building of the town greatly accelerated its progress, and the hope of this being made the county seat, caused it to spring up as if by magic. Building was rapid, so that in about two months' time, following its establishment, about seventy houses were completed. Here, it was said, was to be the junction of the Neosho Division and the main line of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad. The railroad company owning half of the stock of the town company, was the secret of their favoring the town. So rapid, indeed, was the progress of building, etc., that in about six months' time the place had attained a population of about 600, with about fifteen business houses of various kinds, and a large number of residence buildings. But, alas! for its hopes and prospects, it was abandoned by the railroad company, and the rapidity of its decay was equalled only by the rapidity of its growth, so that now it contains but three small stores, a postoffice, two churches and a few residences.

The office was first located at Neola, in 1869, with W. J. Conner as Postmaster. It was changed to Labette, in 1870, when J. Conner was Postmaster, and the office is now held by J. W. H. Galden.

Old Labette was located on the Neosho river, half way between Oswego and Chetopa. Gilbert Martain started a store and saw-mill here. John and Benjamin Rice lived near, on a farm and were interested in the town. James Rice, John Green and Judge Stanfield started a Methodist Church here in 1867. A church building was commenced, but was never finished. The Rices moved to California, and Judge Stanfield died in Osage Township. Mr. Barns had a shingle mill and a butcher shop. There is now nothing left of old Labette.

The first school was taught, in Labette, in the winter of 1871, by J. L. Williams and wife, and was kept in the City Hall, a two-story house erected by a man named Bates and sold to the town company.

A new school building was erected in 1879, and was a one-story frame. A wing addition was erected to this in 1880. The school now numbers about 110 pupils, and is taught by H. Jenkins and Miss Lizzie Sullivan.

The town at one time boasted of a flouring mill, that was built in 1875, by Williams & Bowen, but which has since been abandoned, the machinery having been taken away, and only the building remains.

Captain Anderson started a brewery in 1871, which he ran about two years, when the enterprise failed.

Soon after the founding of the town, under all the favorable impressions given out by the railroad company, people began to rush into the place with the expectation of reaping rich harvests, from its growth. Montana, then a flourishing little city about six miles east, was nearly all pulled up, the houses being moved bodily to Labette. The first house to be thus moved was a saloon building belonging to J. A. Weider, in which he continued dealing out liquors in the new place.

The failure of the railroad company to carry out their promises, scattered every hope, as well as the houses, which were again moved, some back to Montana, and others became scattered about the country in all directions. The downfall of the place was inevitable, since there was nothing to uphold or stimulate it. It now contains a population of about 200, but is without either hope or prospect.

There are two church organizations here, the Methodist and Baptist. The Methodist Church building was erected in 1876, and Rev. Mr. Shambaugh is the present pastor. The Baptist building was erected in 1874, and Rev. G. Richardson, is pastor. Both these congregations are in a flourishing condition, and liberally supported.

There is no newspaper published here, at this time. Soon after the town started, the Town Company began the publication of a paper, called the Labette Sentinel, edited by J. S. Waters, which they ran about a year, and sold out to C. L. Albion, who, after about the same length of time, moved the material away and gave up the publication of the paper at Labette.

In 1849, he went to Fort Madison, Iowa, and remained one year, then returned to Pennsylvania. In 1852, went to Austin, Tex., and May, 1853, returned to Pennsylvania. That fall his parents both died, and November, 1854, he landed at Leavenworth, Kan., and took a claim. He being a Free-state man he experienced much trouble, and through the advice of friends, opened a gunsmith shop in Leavenworth. August, 1856, there was encamped a large body of what was called Kansas Militia, from the South, and armed with United States arms, furnished by one William H. Russell, Government Freighter and Agent for the Pro-slavery party. About the same time a vigilance committee was organized. One day Mr. Golden was informed that it was not safe for him to stay in Leavenworth, so he went to Fort Leavenworth for protection, and stayed some days; but Maj. Sibley informed him by actions that he was not wanted; so he concluded to go to H. L. Pennock's, about six miles from the Fort, but found that Mr. P. and many others had fled to Lawrence for safety. The next morning he saw two men coming from the bushes and recognized them as Free-state men, Robert Roberts and Mr. Bishop. They had eaten their breakfast and started for Lawrence. As they came in sight of Big Stranger Creek they saw a border ruffian's camp. They retreated, but finally crossed the creek near what is now known as Summit Station. Finally they came to old Tonganoxe's house, an Indian, and received something to eat and resumed their march for Lawrence, but soon discovered a band of ruffians and were captured. They were taken along back to Tonganoxe's house. There everything was taken from them. About this time five more ruffians came with orders to bring them to the regiment, so they started on the road; were shot down like dogs and left for dead. Mr. Golden was shot in the right side of the face. The bullet entered the cheek bone, and passed downward to the angle of the jaw, breaking it to pieces. The ruffians then mounted their horses and rode off. The shooting took place about 2 A. M. September, 1856. Mr. Golden heard a rustling noise in the grass and supposed some of them were returning. After some time he went to Tonganoxie's house. They dare not do anything for him, so he went into the brush, wrapped in a blanket, as he supposed, to choke to death. After two nights' and two days' marching without food he arrived at Lawrence, and was taken to the hospital in the city of Mecca, the refuge of Free-state men. While there he was visited by many leading State men, such as Jim Lane and Brown. After some seven weeks he returned to his native place and remained about six months, and came back to Leavenworth in 1857, and in the spring of 1858 was elected Sheriff of Leavenworth County, Kan., and served until 1860; then entered the employ of the Government as gunsmith at Fort Leavenworth. ALTAMONT.

The village of Altamont is situated at the exact geographical center of the county, about twelve miles west of the city of Oswego, on the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad. The town was laid off in the summer of 1879, by a town company, of which I. N. Hamilton was president. Scott Noble erected a dwelling in the fall of 1879, which was the first house built in the town. During the winter of 1879–'80, Ben. Jones also built a dwelling, and Samuel Shoup erected a house during the next summer, which he used for a hotel. In March, 1880, Jones, Burns & Wright opened a general store, and about the same time S. J. and W. R. Hurshberger started the second general store. McCormick started a shoe shop, L. F. Baker a blacksmith shop during the summer of 1880. In January, 1881, M. V. B. Watson built a store room, in which he opened a stock of general merchandise, and in April following H. C. Blanchard started a similar establishment. E. M. Rockwood and James Daniels began the dry goods business in January, 1881, and, about the same time, G. E. Brassfield started a general store, which he changed in about a year to a hardware store, then to a grocery. In the summer of 1882, C. & S. Bonebrake began dealing in groceries, queensware, boots and shoes; and in September of the same year, C. S. Newlon and G. Bush began the drug trade. Later in the fall, H. E. Hammer and Dr. Lake also began the sale of drugs, which they closed out in a few months. Mrs. Jane Huston then started a drug store, but soon closed out her stock to Newlon & Bush, and is now handling confectionery.

A livery barn was opened by the Walters Brothers, in the fall of 1881, which they soon afterward sold to J. A. Jones.

The Avenue Hotel was built in the summer of 1881, by Samuel Shoup, which was first run as the Shoup House, and then as the Avenue Hotel, but is now used by John Huston for a residence. The Altamont House was built in the winter of 1881–'82, and opened for the reception of guests in the spring of 1882, by J. J. Giles.

The Presbyterian Church was erected in the fall of 1880, and the Methodist Church in the fall of 1882. Both are small frame buildings. There are also Baptist and Christian societies, which have no church houses. In the summer of 1882, C. B. Jones opened a shoe shop and in August of that year J. C. Murphy and M. Jones began business dealing in hardware.

The school district within which the town was included, had been organized for some time. The school building was erected in 1872. In the fall of 1880, a new house was built, and the old one sold and reconstructed into a residence. The school district at present has a population of about 100.

The only manufacturing establishment in Altamont is the Altamont steam flouring mill, which was built and put in running order, December 14, 1881. These mills were built and are now owned by M. A. Renner and D. Reed. The building is a two-story frame, and contains three run of buhrs propelled by a thirty-five horse engine.

A postoffice called Elston was established at a town by that name, in 1870. The town was started in the fall and winter of 1869, and stood about two miles and a half east of the present site of Altamont. Internal dissension among its population strangled the town in its infancy, and it was moved piece-meal to other surrounding towns.

After the demise of Elston, and the laying off of Altamont, the location of the office was changed to the last named place, and called Altamont postoffice, and was kept by Mrs. Jane Huston, who has since held the position of Postmistress.

At the first election for the locating of the county-seat, Altamont, as the center of the county, received a number of votes, although no town had yet been started. The hope of its sometime being made the seat of government for Labette County, was more than any other the cause for its being started, a hope which remains with many of its inhabitants to this day.

When the railroad was constructed, Altamont became a station, and is a point from which considerable shipments of grain, etc., are made. A good agricultural country surrounds the town, which supports a fair and stable trade.

SUMNER County takes its name from Hon. Charles Sumner, of Massachusetts, whose services to his country are so recent as to yet be fresh in all minds. The county lies in the southern tier, on what was Indian land for many years after much of Kansas was thickly settled. Cutting three miles from the southern part of the present county ran the Cherokee strip, the pathway of the tribe to their western hunting grounds. From this to the north line of the county ran the Diminished Osage Reserve, known as the "thirty-mile strip," and extending to the western line of the State. The boundaries of the county were defined by the Legislature of 1867, and on May 27, 1868, a treaty was made with the Indians, and 8,000,000 acres of land sold to the L., L. & G. Railway. This included some of Sumner's best lands, and is known as the "Sturgis treaty."

The county is bounded on the east by Cowley County, south by the State line and Indian Territory, west by Harper and Kingman, and north by Sedgwick County.

The county has twenty per cent of bottom and eighty per cent of upland, Prairie covers ninety-seven per cent and forest three per cent.

The principal water courses are the Arkansas and Ninnescah rivers, the former cutting across the northeast corner of the county, and the latter running from near the north-central line of the county to its confluence with the Arkansas at Oxford. Slate, Chikaskia, Fall, Bluff and Cowskin creeks all follow the same general course, and finally empty either into the Arkansas or the Cimmaron river. Apart from this water supply are numerous springs, and water is readily obtained at a depth of from ten to forty feet.

Along the borders of the streams are narrow belts of timber, varying in width from 100 to 700 feet. The varieties found are: Cottonwood, elm, hackberry, walnut, box-elder and ash. A large number of timber claims have been taken in this county, the farmers having planted large areas of cottonwood, box-elder and walnut, and smaller tracts of peach and apple, both of which do remarkably well here.

A fine quality of lime stone is readily procured at almost any point in the county. Sandstone, though not as plentiful or of as good quality, is also found. Fire clay and gypsum are both found, but generally at such a depth as to pre-clude profitable working.

Salt springs are found in Valverdi and Walton townships, and in the latter are the Salt Creek springs, near Salt City.

No paying coal veins have yet been discovered.

EARLY HISTORY.

Early in 1869 John Degolia and A. Cadou built a ranche on Slate Creek, in what is now Sumner Township. In September of that year J. M. Steele, accompanied by H. C. Sluss, went to this place for the purpose of uniting a couple in the bonds of holy matrimony, but the names of the contracting parties to this first wedding in the county have long been forgotten. On April 9 J. M. Buffington crossed the Arkansas and built a house on Section 36, Township 32, Range 2 east, where he still lives. On May 16, Lafayette Binkley and John Horton came to Big Cottonwood crossing, where Oxford now stands, and built the log trading store now occupied by John Hardman, The same month Charles Wichern settled on the Ninnescah. On June 15, Edwin Wiggins, Charles Russell and Frank Holcroft took claims where the cattle trail crosses Slate creek, about eight miles above Wellington. June 20, J. D. Holmes and company settled on the Ninnescah, in what is now London Township. On June 21, J. J. and J. L. Ferguson and J. O. West settled in what is now Belle Plain Township.

On July 5, A. D. Clewell, his wife and six children; G. C. Walton and his wife Sarah, with J. F., L. A., H J., T. N., W. J., E. D., S. A., J. A., and M. E. Walton, T. L. Cambridge, wife and seven children; J. B. Leforce, Sr., wife and six children; J. B. Leforce and wife, and William Leforce with his wife and one child, settled in the county. On July 9, Thomas W. Boyle, (colored) with his wife and three children, settled on the southeast quarter of Section 4, Town 30, Range 1 west. On July 15, W. G. Foraker and Nelson Holmes settled on Slate Creek, just south of where Wellington now stands. Three days later, Thomas A. Woodward, Thomas Fuller and James Sullivan made a settlement. From this time on the settlement on Slate Creek and in the neighborhood of Wellington went on rapidly. July 26, John F. Denogan settled on Slate Creek, where he still resides, and opened a trading post for traffic with the Indians. The same day, Capt. A. B. Barnes, U S. Marshal; Charles Russell Harry Holcroft and Ed. Wiggins, made a settlement on Slate Creek. July 29, T. V. and John S. McMahon and Robert Symington, located one mile southwest of Wellington. During September, Albert and George Brown, John and Simon Botkin, John P. McCulloch, John Burnett and wife, and Mrs. Millie Wallace, (an old lady of eighty-six). took claims near the Slate Creek settlement. On September 15, of this month, the Ninnescah Town Company was organized by R. Freeman, Lafayette Goodrich, Dr. Womsley, and eleven others, and the town laid out on the county line on Section 24, Town 31, Range 2, east. For a time the settlement grew rapidly, but soon disagreements sprang up, and the company broke up, part going to found New Ninnescah, now known as Bushnell, and the others to every point of the compass. A farm house now represents the town. A B. and A. E. Mayhew, Thomas, J. L. and W. B McCammon, Samuel and Luther Spencer, William Meek, wife and four children effected settlement. On October 15, John E. Reid took the first claim near the present site of Caldwell. George Pittman, George A. Jewitt, John Carpenter, H. H. and D. H. Coulter, with their families, all came in November of this year. Charles A. Phillips and John J. Abeel, came December 26, and on the last day of 1870, A. Moovill and Perry Binkley located at the present site of Oxford. This closed the individual settlement of the year, and the influx of 1871 was so great that separate record is impossible. January 1, 1871, Belle Plaine was located upon Section 35, Town 30, Range 1, east, by George A. and James L. Hamilton, J. L. Kellogg, W. P. Hackney, E. M, Miller and J. C. Thurman. On February 1, Rev. W. Perkins preached the first sermon in the county in Binkley's dug-out at Big Cottonwood crossing (Oxford). February 14, the Secretary of the State decided that Sections 16 and 36 in each town, commonly called "School Sections," located on the Indian trust lands, and the Diminished Osage Reserve, were the property of the State. February 25, a ferry across the Arkansas opposite Belle Plaine was put in operation by David Richards. This was the first ferry in the county. The first store in the county was opened at Belle Plaine by Jas. L. Hamilton on the 25th, and the same day the Napawalla Town Company, which laid out the town of Napawalla where Oxford now stands, was formed. This company consisted of A. Morrill, President; C. P. Binkley, Secretary, and L. and J. Binkley, J A and J. M Corbin. On the 28th, Dr. P. A. Wood and Dr. C. R. Godfrey arrived, the former being the first resident physician to practice in the county On March 6, the Oxford Town and Immigration Company was formed at Oswego, Kas., and at once set out for Napawalla. This company consisted of T E. Clark, J. H. Folks, O. E. Kimball, Dr. J. W. Weir, L. J. Goddard, Dr. F. Nixon, Charles Tilton, R. W. Stevenson, A. Graff, A. J. Bower, A. L. Austin, and D. P. Lowe. Arriving at the Arkansas on the 26th, they crossed over, and at once brought the old town of Napawalla, at that time consisting of a single dug-out. On the 31st of March the Town Company ordered a printing press. The following month many events of great importance to both Wellington and Oxford took place, but these will be more appropriately narrated in the individual history of the two places. The first recorded murder in the county took place at Caldwell, July 3, George Peay being shot by O. Bannon. This was also the first death in the county. On July 4, came the first general celebration of the National holiday, speech making and other festivities were indulged in at Belle Plaine, Sumner City and Wellington, the latter being also marked by a flag-raising and a dinner, in which roast buffalo figured conspicuously. Oxford Bufit, the first white child born in Sumner County, saw the light on July 20. August 8th, a company was formed to build a bridge across the Arkansas, a much needed article as the fords were treacherous. September 1, there was a meeting of old soldiers at Wellington. The first marriage license was issued November 17, to George W. Clark and Mary C. Wright, and the ceremony performed the next day by Rev. J. C. Ferguson. With the close of 1871, may be said to close the record of early settlement in the county, the events of later days being worthy of another designation.

The first railway to penetrate the county, was the Cowley, Sumner & Fort Smith, an extension of the Wichita branch of the Atchison, Topeka & SantaFe Road. The bond proposition submitted called for an issue of not to exceed $4,000 per mile, or $180,000 all told, and the construction of not more than forty-five miles of main track in the county. It was also stipulated that the road should be completed to Wellington by September 30, 1879, and to Caldwell by December 31, 1881. The election took place December 31, 1878, and the bonds were carried by a vote of 1706 to 1041. The road was completed to Caldwell on May 31, 1880.

At a special election held July 1, 1879, the Southern Kansas & Western Railway received aid to the amount of $18,000 from Oxford, $20,000 from Wellington, and $16,000 from Dixon Township. The proposition to issue bonds was defeated in Avon and Osborn townships.

On March 6, 1880, this road (a branch of the L. L. & G.) was completed to Oxford, and on the 27th of the same month to Wellington. On the 28th the first passenger train was run. June 8, 1880, the bonds of Oxford and Wellington townships were issued, but those of Dixon were withheld, and July 2, an injunction issued to restrain their delivery to the railway company.

On May 11, South Haven Township petitioned for a special election on the subject of aiding the Sumner County Railway, which now runs south from Wellington to Hunnewell. The election took place in due time and South Haven secured the bonds by a vote of 144 to 43 Wellington City also took $10,000 in bonds. An election was also held in Guelph Township, but resulted in the defeat of the proposition. The road was at once built, and is now in successful operation by the K. C., L. & S. K. railway.

On September 6, 1882, the Wichita and Southwestern, the Harvey County and the Cowley, Sumner & Fort Smith roads were consolidated, and H. C. St. Clair and J. H. Folks elected directors. This was practically no change of ownership, the roads all being parts of the A., T. & S. F. system.

Prior to these successful undertakings, were two others worthy of brief mention.

On July 2, 1877, the Solomon, Arkansas Valley & Eastern Narrow Gauge Railway, was, by a vote of 833 to 626, given aid to the amount of not more than $4,000 per mile in bonds. The second of these propositions was made by the Kansas City, Burlington & Southwestern Railway and telegraph line. This provided for the issuance of bonds to the amount of not more than $4 000 per mile, or a total of $170.000. The election took place December 3, 1878, and resulted in the defeat of the proposition, by a vote of 929 to 1,761.

A petition signed by forty seven voters of Ryan Township, dated April 1, 1882, was filed with the County Clerk, asking the county commissioners to call a special election in that township to vote $18,000 to the St. Louis, Anthony & Salt Plains Railroad. A similar petition was signed by thirty-seven voters of Illinois Township to vote $18,000 bonds to the same railroad. No action has ever been taken on these petitions, at the request of the railroad authorities.

The story of Slade and his various murders has become so widely known through the medium of the world-read "Roughing It," that the part of civilization which has never come west of the Mississippi has formed the idea that the man who keeps his private graveyard is an inhabitant of Colorado, or some indefinite point known as "out West." The southern line of Kansas has, however, seen probably as many bloody tragedies as any other borderland. A fair sample of the many wanton murders, which the nearness of the Indian Territory seemed to render safe for the murderer, was that which ended the career of the famous McCarty. The story runs as follows: On April 1, 1872, McCarty, who had some trouble with a ranchman named Eugene Fielder, went to John Reid's ranche, where Fielder was staying, and attempted to gain admittance. Being refused, he forced an entrance. Fielder, who was lying across the foot of the bed, firing as McCarty reached the doorway. McCarty returned the fire killing Fielder. He then ran out on the prairie under fire from all the occupants of the ranche. Fielder had friends in the county, and it is probable that McCarty would have been the subject of their attentions 'ere long, but his ambition to be known as "a bad man" led him into a second murder before there had been an opportunity to avenge the first. On April 9, eight days after the murder of Fielder, McCarty entered J. M Thompson's store and found there Dr. Anderson, "the man with the plug hat." Anderson had belonged to the vigilantes of Butler County, and it is probable that McCarty had cause to remember him. However that might be, he at once pulled his revolver with the remark "that he could put a hole through that hat." This was done in a semi-jocose way, and the bystanders, beyond making him put up his "gun," paid little attention to the act. A few minutes later, however, when Anderson's attention was called to something in the back part of the store, McCarty fired, the bullet striking Anderson just back of the ear and causing almost instant death. McCarty fled to the ranche of Curley Marshall, a short distance from the scene of the shooting. That night Doc. Rornbacher and a posse of vigilantes went to Marshall's ranch and demanded McCarty's surrender. This being refused the ranche was oiled and fired, the vigilantes shooting at all who escaped from the burning building. In the affray several ranchmen were wounded, but McCarty effected his escape to the Indian Territory. The next day "Boosey" Nickleson appeared in the settlement for supplies, and after being intimidated into admitting that they were for McCarty, was compelled to lead the way to his hiding place. Just at day break on the morning of April 11, the party found their man on the bare prairie—and left him there. On April 14, Fox, Webb and Robinson went out and buried the body.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION, ETC.

The county was organized February 7, 1871, and the document creating it is now spread upon the record of the County Commissioners. It bears the signatures of Gov. James M. Harvey, and W. H. Smallwood, Secretary of State, appoints Wm. J. Uhler, John J. Abert and John S. McMahon, County Commissioners and designates Meridian as the temporary seat of justice.

A word of explanation as to how a spot of bare prairie should be named the county-seat is in place. In the fall of 1870, Sumner City, a few miles from Wellington, had been laid out and preparations were making for presentation of its claims to county-seat honors to the Governor. This movement certain parties determined to frustrate, and on December 26, 1870, Chas. A. Phillips, J J. Abert, Wm. J. Uhler, and E. H. Nugent, all of Wichita, camped four miles southeast of Wellington. Here they met Col. A. J. Angell, with a surveying party, running section lines Overtures were made to Angell, and accepted, and on January 15, 1871, Meridian was located on Section 32, Township 32, Range 1 east. A bogus census was made by John C. Nugent, and showed the county to have 651 inhabitants. Armed with this document Angell started for the capital, where he arrived on February 7th. J. M. Steele was already in the city, in the interest of Sumner City, but Angell secured an interview with Gov. Harvey, and before Steele knew of his presence, had secured the appointment of Meridian.

The first record of the County Commissioners is dated "June 4, 1871, on southeast quarter of Section 32, Township 32, Range 1 east," and orders that as the county had failed to erect any buildings at the point designated as the temporary county seat and as Jackson M. Lemmond had taken this quarter section as his claim, Wellington should be the place of transacting county business until the county seat question had been settled by ballot. The Commissioners at this time wished to complete the organization of the county, but as County Clerk, Charles A. Philips, and Commissioner, had forfeited citizenship by taking claims in Sedgwick County, their places were declared vacant, and the two remaining Commissioners proceeded to appoint Clark R. Godfrey, Special County Clerk, and David Richardson, Special County Commissioner. They then adjourned to meet at Wellington. Their second meeting was held August 10, 1871, and the first question raised was the licensing of dram shops. It was decided to issue licenses at $20 per month On August 23, 1871, the county was divided into three County Commissioners Precincts, the voting place in No. One being at Belle Plaine; in No. Two, at the house of Henry Brown, on Shell Creek, and in No. Three, at the house of Colson & Ryland, on Showcaspah River. A special election of county officers was ordered for September 26.

C. A. Philips was appointed County Clerk on February 7, 1871, but failed to act, and soon became a non-resident. On June 4 the office was declared vacant by the County Commissioners, and Clark R. Godfrey appointed. At the regular election of November, 1871, C.

S. Brodbent was elected, and continued to serve until April 24, 1875, when he resigned, and Stacy B. Douglass was appointed to fill the unexpired term. Mr. Douglass was elected at the next regular election, and in 1877-'79-'81, and is now in office. At the special election of September 26, 1871, W. A. Thompson was elected Clerk of the District Court, and November 7, 1871, re-elected. L. K. Myers was elected in 1872-'74; J. H. Dougherty, 1876; Charles W. Morse, 1878-'80; P. V. C. Pool, 1882. The first County Attorney was George N. Godfrey, elected September 26, 1871. November of the same year, Reuben Riggs captured the office. C. Willsie was elected in 1872, J. Wade McDonald in 1874, but left the county June 1, 1876, and L. F. Blodgett was appointed to fill the unexpired term. John G. Tucker was elected in November, 1876, but died in office, and L. F. Blodgett was again appointed, on June 19, 1877. D. N. Caldwell was elected 1878, Charles Willsie 1878-'80, and J. T. Herrick 1882.

The County Superintendents of Public Instruction have been: A. M. Colson, elected September 26, 1871; T. H. Mason, November, 1871-'72; S. B. Fleming, 1874 (resigned March 5, 1875, and J. P. Jones appointed); J. P. Jones, 1876; John D. Beck, 1878; J. V. Ratliff, 1878-'80-'82. Probate Judges have been: George M. Miller, 1871; J. W. McDonald, 1872; J. T. Herrick, 1874; E. Evans, 1876-'78-'80; I. N. King, 1882. Sheriffs have been: J. J. Ferguson, elected September 26, 1871; G. A. Hamilton, November, 1871; John G. Davis, 1872-'73 (resigned in the spring of 1875, and Joe M. Thralls appointed April 19, but the commissioners refusing his bond, J. K. Hastie was appointed May 15); James E. Reed, 1875; L. K. Myers, 1877; J. M. Thralls, 1879-'81. The first Register of Deeds was J. Romine, elected September 26, 1871. He was followed by William Nixon, 1871-'73; John f. Showalter, 1875; J. T. Hickman, 1877; T. A. Hubbard, 1879-'81. R. Freeman was elected County Treasurer, September 26, 1871, and J. L. Kellogg in November following, and re-elected in 1873. A. B. Mayhew filled the office from 1875 to 1879, when M. B. Keagy, the present incumbent, was elected.

The members of the Lower House from this county have been: W. P. Hackney, 1871; George M. Miller, 1872; W. P. Hackney, 1873; William Carter, 1874; T. A. Hubbard, 1875-'76; C. R. Godfrey 1877-78-79; A. B. Mayhew, 1880; W. J. Lingenfelter, 1882.

The first county-seat election took place on September 26, 1871, and gave Belle Plaine 384, Wellington 221, Oxford 119, Sumner City 79, and Meridian 2. This left the question still open. A second election was ordered for November 10, following. This election resulted in the polling of 420 votes for Belle Plaine, 285 for Wellington, 129 for Oxford, 111 for Sumner City, and 2 for Meridian. As there seemed to be no prospect of a speedy choice, and as Meridian was still bare prairie, the County Commissioners, on December 21, 1871, ordered that hereafter county business must be done at Wellington, and that town should be the temporary county-seat.

Another election was called for January 29, 1872, and on February 3, the Commissioners, in obedience to a mandamus issued by Judge H. G. Webb, met at Meridian to canvass the vote. Objection was made to R. W. Stevenson acting as Commissioner, and during the argument that ensued, Commissioner A. D. Rosencrans resigned. The Board then adjourned, and the vote was never canvassed.

March 26, 1872, came the third effort to locate the seat of justice and Wellington, though not receiving enough votes to secure the prize, was evidently in a fair way to get it. The vote stood: Wellington, 396; Oxford, 297; Belle Plaine, 282; Caldwell, 2. A final election between the two points receiving the highest number of votes, took place April 9, 1872, and resulted in favor of Wellington, by a score of 571 to 426.

On January 21, 1873, a petition signed by L. W. Clark and 656 others, for the re-location of the county seat was presented. This was accompanied by a counter petition from Dr. P. A. Wood and 785 others, who held that the original organization of the county and location of the county seat was legal and valid. This petition after due consideration was refused on the ground that it was not signed by three fifths of the legal voters of the county. Since this time no further effort has been made to wrest the county seat from Wellington.

The first county court house was a small frame building, built to stand upon the famous Meridian townsite. When the commissioners decided to transact business at Wellington, this structure was secured and occupied until the completion of the present county court house in 1874.

The present county court house was built by Wellington Township at a cost of $5,000. It was completed on August 20, 1874, and at once occupied by the county officers, the township having leased it to the county, for ten years, in consideration of its being furnished by the latter. This building is much to small for the needs of the county, having but three offices on the first floor and one on the second, and another year will probably see the commencement of a more suitable building.

On August 8, 1882, was issued an order for an election to be held November 7, to decide upon the question of making during the years 1883 and 1884, a tax of five mills for court house and three mills for bridge purposes. This was carried by a majority of 1,001 votes. The present total taxable valuation is in round numbers, $4,000,000 and this tax will give a fund of not far from $50,000, to be expended for court house purposes. Such a sum should insure one of the finest buildings of the sort in the southern part of the State.

On February, 3, 1880, the proposition to purchase a poor farm and erect suitable buildings was carried by a vote of 1526 to 695.

Work was begun on February 3, 1881, and the buildings completed in April of the same year at a cost of $1,850.

The contract for constructing a brick county jail 22x32 feet, and of one-story in height, was let, on November 16, 1878, to P. J. Pauly & Bro., of St. Louis, for $5,000. Work was begun at once, and the jail was completed in the spring of 1879.

The returns made to the County Clerk in 1882 show that there were in the county, 7,256 horses, 1,770 mules and asses, 5,670 milch cows, and 28,025 sheep. The wool clip of 1881 was 56,192 pounds.

Trees in bearing in 1882 are reported as follows: Apple, 16,877; pear, 460; peach, 307,-898; plum, 7,129, and cherry, 7,308. The great discrepancy in favor of peaches is said to be due to their double use as fruit producers and fuel makers.

WELLINGTON.

Wellington town site was selected on April 2, 1871, and two months later to a day, the Wellington Town Company was organized. This company consisted of: R. A Davis, A. A. Jordan, P. A. Wood, L. K. Myers, C. R. Godfrey, J. S. McMahan, J. P. McCulloch and A. N. Randall. The town was named by R. A. Davis, an Englishman, and a great admirer of the "Little Duke." On April 4 the town was surveyed, and L. K. Myers began the erection of the log house until recently occupied by G. M. Winn. On April 9 the first religious services in Wellington were conducted in the unfinished building of A. W. Shearman by Rev. Shaeffer. On April 15 A. W. Shearman opened the first business house in Wellington. On June 15 the Civic House, now the Commercial, was opened by William Burton. June 26 a tri-weekly hack line was put on between Wellington and Winfield. August 10 the first transfer of real estate in Wellington was effected, J. P. McCulloch selling his one-eighth interest in the Town Company to R. A. Davis for $440.

The first building in town was erected by Shearman Bros., and still stands next the store of C. G. Larned & Co. The second was the log house which now stands back of Dr. Wood's drug store, and was put up by Clark R. Godfrey. The third building, also of logs, was the residence of L. K. Myers. The first frame residence was put up by William H. McClelland. A. D. Rosencrans built the first hotel, a small frame structure, now used as a store room for agricultural implements by L. K. Myers. Dr. P. A. Wood was the first physician in Wellington, as well as in the county, and D. N. Caldwell the first attorney. L. K. Myers was the first surveyor.

The postoffice at Wellington was established in 1871, and C. R. Godfrey, who was appointed Postmaster, kept office in Wood's drug store, a log building in the rear of the present store. Dr. S. Mann was appointed in 1873, and served until 1875, when Oscar Hackney took the office. L. F. Blodgett, the present Postmaster, was appointed in 1877. The postoffice remained in the drug store until Hackney took possession, when it was removed to the Bishop Building. During Blodgett's term of office the mails have been handled in the Godfrey Building and in the present quarters on Seventh street. The office was made a money order one in 1875, and the first money order purchased July 6 by Clark R. Godfrey. It became a Presidential office during Mr. Blodgett's term.

Wellington was incorporated as a city of the third class on November 13, 1872. A city election was called for November 30, and resulted in the selection of D. N. Caldwell, Mayor, and J. A. Dillar, Police Judge. The council consisted of A. W. Shearman, W. P. Hackney, A. N. Randall, John G. Tucker, and T. J. Riley. T. C. Gatliff was appointed Clerk. In April, 1873, came the regular spring election, and E. P. Ritchie became Mayor. C. R. Godfrey was Mayor in 1874; J. W. McDonald, in 1875; H. S. Carter, 1876; J. Bohanna, 1877; A. M. Shannon, 1878-79; J. Bohanna, 1880. Bohanna died in office in January, 1881, and P. A. Wood, the present Mayor, was elected to fill the unexpired term. J. A. Dillar was City Clerk in 1873; J. T. Showater, in 1874; T. C. Gatliff, 1875; J. P. Jones, 1876; J. L. Trout, 1877-78 79; W. H. Stefelbach, 1880; W. E. Cox, 1881-82. The present council consists of George M. Miller, M. Davidson, P. C. Gatliff, Sr., N. H. Coverdale, H. S. Carter, J. M. Graham, S. H. Smith and A. Carroll. On February 14, 1880, the city, having been found to have over 2,000 inhabitants, was made of the second class, and divided into four wards, which are bounded by Main and Harvey streets and the city limits.

All new towns in the State have had a transition period, when the small wooden buildings first erected have become an eyesore but have yet been allowed to stand, inviting a large and contagious fire. This was the case with the block between Harvey and Seventh streets, on Main, when the great fire of November 3, 1881, broke out. Starting in the bakery of F. Markwort, it spread with great rapidity until the entire Main street front was consumed. The buildings on the opposite side of Main street were seriously threatened, and in several stores the window glass was broken by the intense heat, but no serious losses were entailed. The ownership of the burned buildings, with the loss entailed, is as follows: J. G. Woods, $3,000; Murphy & Carroll, $8,000; Miss Lizzie Campbell, $1,500; F. Markwort, $3,000; J. A. Dillar, $1,000; J. A. Neff, $2,500; Knotts & Wallace, $5,000; L. Guthrie, $1 200; A. J. Bowers, $1,500; E. M. Potter, $3,000; Z. Meixsell, $4,000; W. M. Rankin, $1,000; Dr. Charles R. Adams, $1,500; J. W. Rankin, $1,500; C. Toms, $800; J. D. Decker, $1,200; C. G. Larned & Co., $10,000; W. C. Crawford, $2,000. Other parties having offices in the burned buildings were losers of smaller amounts, the total footing of losses being something over $40,000. Many of the losers were well insured, but several of the heaviest dealers held no policies. The work of re-building the burned district was at once begun, and the block now has the finest buildings of the city, including Wood's Bank and opera house, and the new three-story brick hotel.

SCHOOLS, CHURCHES AND SOCIETIES.

The first school exercises in the town were conducted by Mrs. B. Cooley, who kept a private school. On September 16, 1872, the little schoolhouse still standing on the corner of the school lot was completed, and from that time on the public school system has been well kept up. The small original building was in use until 1879, and in it taught Miss Emma De Armand and her sister, Miss A. De Armand, James A. Ryland, J. V. Ratliff, J. P. Jones and L. H. Robberts. Early in 1879 the work on the present fine brick building was begun, and the structure completed at a cost of $8,000. This amount was secured by bonds, bearing eight per cent. interest and running twenty years, which were sold to the State Board of Education at par. A. P. Warrington was principal in 1879 and 1880, D. S. MacEwan in 1881, and H. A. McLean in the school year of 1882-83. He is assisted by Miss Bertha Price, Mrs. J. V. Ratliff, Miss Lillian Beach, Miss Lida Herrick, Miss Miriam Mann and Miss Sarah Drouillard. The last report to the county superintendent of public instruction shows an enumeration of 347 males and 397 females, an enrollment of 274 males and 272 females, an average attendance of 163 males and 165 females, giving totals of 744, 546 and 328, respectively. The school has six rooms and requires the services of two male and four female teachers.

The First Presbyterian Church of Wellington was organized, with a membership of seven, on June 23, 1872, by Rev. W. R. Boggs. On July 20 Mr. Boggs died. S. B. Fleming was pastor in 1873 and 1874, and A. M. Mason in 1876. Then came a period when the church was practically dead. A revival of interest took place in 1878, and the church has been supplied by William Patton, F. T. Berry and C. H. Pattee since that time. The present pastor, Rev. J. H. McClung, was installed in 1881. The society now numbers one hundred and twenty-five. A Sabbath School was established in 1878, now has an attendance of one hundred and fifty, and is in charge of G. M. Miller.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of Wellington was organized in April, 1873, by Rev. E. A. Graham, who had, in March previous, been appointed to the Wellington and Oxford circuit. At the time of organization it had eleven members. The same year the parsonage valued at $600 was built. In March, 1874, E. J. King was appointed to this circuit, with I. N. Boycourt as assistant. This was grasshopper year, and in August, King was obliged to leave for want of support. Rev. J. C. Morse was then appointed to fill out the year. H. J. Walker was pastor in 1875, 1876 and 1877, and I. N. Boycourt in 1878. The church here was made a station in the latter year and a church building begun. This was completed the following season at a cost of $4,600. Boycourt was re-appointed in 1879, but resigned in September, and A. H. Naftzger, a supernumerary of the Southern Kansas Conference, was appointed, and continued his labors until July, 1880, when he resigned, and the year was completed by C. R. Pattee. I. N. Moorhead was pastor in 1881, and in March, 1882, Rev. S. Price, the present pastor, was placed in charge. The society now numbers one hundred and fifty-seven. A Sabbath school, was organized at about the same time as the church, now has an attendance of one hundred and seventy-five, and is in charge of G. F. Hargis.

The Baptist Church of Wellington was organized with six members in July, 1878. The organization was effected at the house of J. Q. A. Beal, no minister being present. Shortly after Rev. J. Cairns of Winfield visited the society, and completed its work in the opera house. The first pastor of the church was Rev. C. W. Gregory, who remained about nine months, and was followed by Rev. D. S. McEwan, who remained until December, 1882. The society is now without a pastor. Present membership eighty-three. A fine church building seating 300 and costing $4,500 has been erected. A Sabbath school was organized in 1878, and now has an average attendance of 125. It is in charge of J. L. Hibbard.

THE PRESS, BANKS, ETC.

The Sumner County Press.—When in March, 1872, the Oxford Banner, run by Mugford & Hughes and owned by the Town Company, was discontinued, its office was very unceremoniously dealt with. The old press was cast out upon the prairie, and the type pied and boxed up roughly, was deposited in the back part of a cobbler's shop. Matters were in this shape when the Town Company offered Folks & Ludlow the office and $400 in cash to run a weekly paper in Oxford for one year. The offer was accepted, and fifty-three weekly papers issued when the proprietors, plus an office but minus the $400, took the outfit to Wellington and began the Sumner County Press. This removal was not effected without trouble. Folks owed a board bill and had not a cent to settle with, and no one in Oxford would assist him in moving the material, whose loss would benefit their rival town. At this juncture a good Wellingtonian came to the front with an order for ten copies of the paper, and the money therefor. A few days saw the office established in Wellington, where the first copy was issued on July 27, 1873. This edition consisted of 360 copies. On December 18, of the same year, L. W. Bishop bought Ludlow's interest. On January 3, 1878, the width of column was enlarged and a partial new dress put on, and March 10, 1879, a steam engine and a "Fairhaven" cylinder press were procured. On August 16, 1881, A. A. Richards bought out Folks, and July 1, 1882, took the half interest of Mr. Bishop and became sole proprietor. During his management the paper has made several important improvements, has been enlarged to a nine column folio, received an entire new dress, and attained a "cash in advance" circulation of 2,200 per week. It is now, counting its time of publication at Oxford, the oldest paper south and west of the Arkansas River, and has gained, what no new paper could have, the confidence, business and hearty support of the people in other counties as well as of those in Sumner.

The Wellington Banner, a seven column folio, spread itself for public inspection on October 2, 1872. G. P. Garland was godfather to the infant and took it through until January 15, 1873, when it froze out and the office was sold to T. J. Hadley, who took it to Oxford.

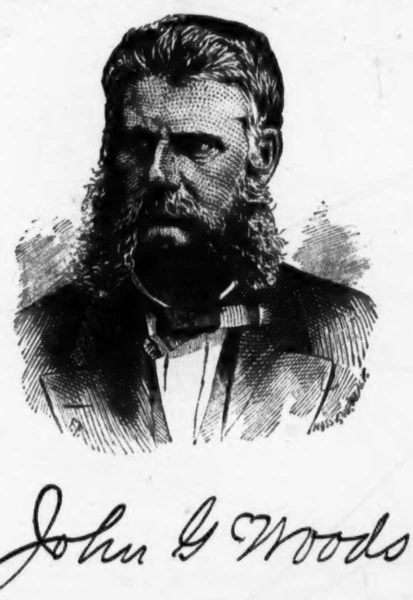
The Sumner County Democrat was established February 11, 1876, by L. C. Crawford and M. M. Edmiston, as an eight column folio. On December 22 the paper bore the names of Crawford and Dr. I. S. Bowerman, and December 29, of Crawford and G. G. Miner. January 10, 1877, the paper became a seven column folio, "all home printed." March 22, Miner retired and Sykes took his place. On May 23 Crawford's name appears alone. From February 13, to May 29, 1878, Leonard was associated in the management, and June 6, Wm. Quigley became interested in the paper, and May 14, 1879, the paper was suspended.

The Wellingtonian.—This paper was started from the consolidated Democrat and Vidette on February 1, 1882, by W. M. Allison. It ran as an eight column folio until December, 1882, when it changed to nine columns. It has now a circulation of 1,000, appears Thursdays, and is Republican.

The Wellington Democrat.—This paper was started with the office and subscription list of the defunct Hunnewell Independent. The first issue bears the date of August 12, 1882; is a seven column folio, and bears the legend T. P. Richardson, editor. It is all home printed, is circulated Saturdays, and has a circulation of 700.

Wellington Bank.—This institution is the successor of J. K. Neal & Son, a private banking firm which began business in December, 1879, and was run until February 6, 1882, when it was merged in the present bank. The Wellington bank was organized under the State laws and has a capital of $35,000, and a surplus of $5,000. Its officers are: J. A. Dillar, president; F. P. Neal, cashier. At present it occupies a leased building, but by the spring of 1883 will complete an elegant stone and brick structure costing $10,000. It is hardly necessary to state that the business of the bank is in a prosperous condition.

The Woods Bank.—The private banking house of John G. Woods was established in September, 1873, and is the oldest south and west of the Arkansas River. The bank was run the first year by Woods & Share, but has ever since been the sole property of John G. Woods. Business was at first transacted in the little red building on North Main street, now used as a carpenter shop. During 1874, the brick building, 22x50, on the corner of Main and Seventh, was erected at a cost of $2,500. This was the first brick structure south and west of the Arkansas, and was built of brick manufactured in the county. This was destroyed in the great fire of 1881, and the new stone and brick building, 50x85, took its place. This is two stories in height, the upper floor being fitted up as an opera house, and the whole costing $20,000.



John G Woods

The Opera House is one of the handsomest and best arranged public halls in southwestern Kansas. The floor is inclined and fitted with elegant opera chairs, and the semi-circular balcony above with stationary seats, the whole giving a seating capacity of 800. The stage runs the full width of the building, is twenty-five feet deep, and has a full complement of scenery suited to all ordinary stage business and very neatly executed.

The Wellington City Mills were built in 1877 by Myers, Stettler & Co., at a cost of $30,000. In 1879 they were sold to George H. Hunter, who now operates them. The mill building is three stories, with basement, and covers a space of 40x46 feet. It is fitted with five run of buhr stones and an engine of forty-eight horse power. Its daily capacity is 100 barrels of "patent" flour, but in times of great haste it has been pushed to 125 barrels. This mill is essentially a home institution, having never gone outside the county for supplies.

The Reina Mills were completed in 1880 by Hargis & Clark, the present owners. They are 40x50 feet, have three stories and basement and cost with their machinery $45,000. They are fitted with seven buhr stones and two sets of double rolls, and turn out three hundred barrels of flour daily. Power is furnished by an engine of 100 horse power.

The Creamery.—On July 14, 1882, a proposition to build a creamery at Wellington was submitted to the board of trade by Holt and Hall, of Osceola, Iowa. He graduated at the latter institution in 1866, and in the same year, entered the junior class of Hanover College. Here he applied himself so closely to study that his health became impaired, and he was obliged to relinquish the course he had marked out, and left the institution at the close of the year. From here he moved about from place to place, first merchandising in Illinois, then in Iowa, and back to Illinois, until finally in 1879 he emigrated to Kansas, where with C. C. Curtis and F. A. Parsons, he established the present business. The business amounted to $30,000, and in the year 1881 it reached $110,000. In 1881, November 2d, the store was destroyed by fire, and had but small insurance. In 1882-83 the firm erected their present elegant and commodious three story and basement block, the ground floor being occupied by their business and a drug store, the upper two stories being designed for a first-class hotel, it being 140 x 50, having a nine and a half feet basement, and the first two stories fourteen feet and and the third twelve feet. I. N. KING, was born on the 28th day of June, 1849, in Whitley County, Ky. His grandfather, Isaac King, being one of the first settlers of Western Virginia, now Kentucky. He was raised on the farm until the age of seventeen. Went to school at the Agricultural and Mechanical College, at Lexington, Ky., where he met with the usual ups and downs that usually attend such a career, and where he staid two years, working on the farm four hours each day, for which labor he received from eight to ten cents per hour, and attended to recitation in school the remaining hours, making his work pay the expense of schooling. At the age of twenty was appointed Sheriff of Whitley County, Ky., in which capacity he served an unexpired term, taught school two winters, and farmed during the summer, reading law at the same time. In 1873, he was admitted, in Kentucky, to practice law, and came to Wellington, Kas., where he found the imagined green fields of prosperity had withered and faded away to a dry brown prairie without habitations, and with the weighty load of disappointment and not having enough cash to pay board until he could become acquainted with the hotel man, he abandoned his chosen profession and clerked for a groceryman until about January, 1874, when the proprietor becoming acquainted with him, he quit and went into Jackson Township, where he taught school three months, and hired as a farm hand during the summer, and in the meantime Jackson Township having become acquainted with him, he returned to Wellington with a faint hope of success at whatever might turn up and happy, for the hotel man had gone to parts unknown. He received the appointment of Deputy County Surveyor, under D. N. Cook, which position he held until the end of the term of office, Cook having had to go to Missouri to get a living, and no one else wanted the office bad enough to ask the Governor for an appointment, and was engaged in the real estate, abstract and loan business a season, and was elected Police Judge of the city of Wellington, there being no opposition, and in November, 1877, was elected Justice of the Peace, holding both offices until police term expired, and was appointed to the office of City Attorney, which he held also (no one else being willing to take it) and continued to hold and be re-elected Justice of the Peace until January, 1883, when he resigned, having been elected Probate Judge in November, 1882. Having been raised as a farmer and educated at an agricultural school, his inclinations are agricultural and stock raising, intermingled with his professional and official duties, therefore he has not neglected his 160 acres of land, which he pre-empted as an early settler. He was married to Miss Leila Aldrich, of Indiana, in 1879, by whom he has had two children—Ethel and Nettie—Nettie, deceased, January 6, 1883. October 3, 1861, he enlisted in the Seventy-fourth Ohio Regiment, Company D, in which he was appointed Second Lieutenant, and served until the latter part of 1862. Meantime he had been promoted to the First Lieutenantcy, when he was mustered out. The Rev. Mr. McClung was largely instrumental in recruiting and organizing this regiment. The zeal that he manifested in his efforts to raise volunteers, by speeches and personal contact with men, entitles him to some credit as being one of the individuals who furnished the brains for obtaining material for, and organizing, the same. Returning to his home he resumed the practice of his profession, and continued until 1873, when he was examined by the Presbytery of Portsmouth, Ohio, and licensed to preach, September 24, of the same year. From this time he preached until 1878, in Adams and Brown counties, when he emigrated to Paola, Miami Co., Kas., at which place he pursued his labors until October, 1881, when he removed to Wellington, Kas., where he has charge of the First Presbyterian Church. During his labors at various places in Kansas he has added to the church about 200 members, in Paola about 150, in Sumner County 54, and married about fifty-six couples in Kansas, and eighteen couples before coming to the State. He was married to Miss Penelope Taylor, of Ross County, Ohio, by whom he has five children living—J. Belle, Lizzie, Janus P., Jennie and William. At the age of twenty-two years he began teaching school in his native State, continuing the same for one year, at the end of which time he entered a retail drug store in Memphis, Mo., as a clerk, where he remained one year and a half, in the meantime devoting his leisure and spare time to the study of medicine. In the spring of 1872 he, as one of the trustees, assisted in the organization of the first Presbyterian Church of Oxford, and was soon after elected elder. This was the first church organization in southern Kansas, west of the Arkansas River. The doctor remained in Oxford until October, 1877, when he went to New York and attended the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, devoting the most of the term to private courses. In March, 1878, he returned to Oxford and resumed his practice, continuing until July 1, 1878, when he moved to Wellington, the county seat of Sumner County, where he formed a co-partnership with Dr. J. B. Cory, both in the practice of his profession and in the drug business; continued in the same until December 1, 1881, when he bought out the interest of his partner, and continued alone until October 20, 1882, when he admitted a partner in the practice of medicine. In 1872 he located 160 acres of land, near Oxford, which he has improved, and now runs as a grain farm in connection with his other business. Dr. Maggard is also one of the original stockholders in the First National Bank of Wellington, being one of the directors and secretary of the same. She was formerly from Ohio, having received a literary and musical education both at the Western Reserve Seminary and Mount Union College, Ohio. Mrs. Maggard is now one of the leading musicians of Wellington, occupying a prominent position in her church choir. In perusing the biographies of such men as Dr. J. A. Maggard, the idea presents itself to the mind of the reader of the possibilities of the future of young men with cultivated talents and ambition, and especially so of those settling in the West. Being yet but a young man, he has obtained eminence in his profession, as well as celebrity as a financier and distinction as a social Christian gentleman. Such men are not only makers of their own fortunes, most useful members of society, but also models in every particular, which all may imitate with the most satisfactory results.

The land comprised in the town site was 113 acres, on Fall Creek, and was purchased of the Government.

The first building erected was the log store of C. H. Stone, put up by the town company, the second, also of logs, was built by Charles Sullivan. The first frame building was put up by George Haines, the spring of 1872, and was used for hotel purposes. The first physician was B. W. Fox, the first attorney, L. B. The first wedding in the town occurred on August 23, 1872, the contracting parties being George Grant and Christina Reid, and Dr. B. W. Fox, officiating. Up to 1879 the town was little more than a trading point, and had in that year but 260 inhabitants. With the railway, came a rapid growth which has made Caldwell one of the liveliest cities of 1,500 inhabitants in the West, and will soon raise it to the grade of second class cities.

The first money order was issued on April 15, 1881, and transferred money from S. W. Dutton, of Caldwell, to Susie Dutton, at El Dorado. The office became a Presidential one, July 1, 1881.

Hackney, now Representative from Cowley County.

Belle Plaine postoffice was established in 1871, and G. A. Hamilton appointed Postmaster. Remaining in Menard County but a few years, he removed to Girard, Macoupin County, where, in his nineteenth year, he united with the church. At the age of twenty, he began preaching the Gospel, working as an evangelist, in which work he continued five years, with the exception of eighteen months, when he was located at Old Union, De Witt Co., Ill. OXFORD.

Long before the sale of any part of the Osage lands, the favorite camp of the Great Osages was at Big Cottonwood ford, near the point where the Ninnescah empties into the Arkansas River. Here, in 1870, the Binkley boys made their dug out cabin, and here, as has already been related in the early history of the county, the towns of Napawalla and Oxford were successively located. In April, 1871, O. Graff opened at Oxford the first regular store in the county, putting in a stock of goods valued at $3,500. May 12 of the same year a saw-mill was started by T. R. Donley and J. T. McMillan. May 28, W. H. Mugford reached the town with the famous pioneer printing press. May 30, J. T. Richmond began the manufacture of native lumber. April 1, 1872, the township voted $10,000 bonds to build a bridge across the river opposite the town. November 15, 1876, the town company was dissolved.

On October 17, 1879, Oxford was incorporated as a city of the third class; B. F. Smith elected Mayor; Joseph Sleigh, Police Judge, and George T. Walton appointed City Clerk.

While Oxford was known as Napawalla, a post office was established here, and L. Binkley was Postmaster. After the founding of Oxford, a new postoffice was started, with T. E. Clark as Postmaster. L. C. Gridley, Jr., followed Clark, and was in turn succeeded by H. H. Buckles, the present official. The first Oxford post office is now used as a coal house. The first money order was issued July 1, 1878, and conveyed $50 from L. F. Chandler to Charles Tilton, of Fairmount, Ill.

On January 1, 1872, school district No. 1, the first in the county, was organized at Oxford. A schoolhouse had already been provided, and had been completed and in use since October 7, 1871. This was the first schoolhouse south and west of the Arkansas River. Miss Minnie Whaley, the first teacher, was followed by S. G. Mason, Ansel Gridley, Sr., John P. Jones, Mrs. D. A. Abbott, J. P. Jones and M. Sommerville, all teachers in the first school building. On December 31, 1874, the new stone schoolhouse was completed, and May 10, 1875, school opened in it under J. V. Ratliff and Mrs. D. A. Abbott. O. F. McKim was Principal in 1876, and was followed by A. Gridley, Jr., W. Hamrick, who taught two years; N. W. Wyatt, who also taught two years, and the present teachers, T. B. Hubbard and Mrs. G. Miller. The school now numbers 135 scholars. It would leave the educational history of the city in a sadly incomplete state, were the tale of the original schoolhouse omitted. When first built it stood near the center of the town, but opposing factions caused its removal to various sites, and finally it rested in the western part of town. The town company then, forgetful of the schoolhouse, sold the lot in which it stood to Mr. Ansel Gridley, Sr., who claimed the building. This claim was a matter of dispute, and to settle it, the citizens one day, in Mr. Gridley's absence, put the building on wheels and moved it into town. On the completion of the new schoolhouse, the old one was moved six miles south, and was known as the Jenkin's schoolhouse. Here it remained until a new building was put up, when the historic schoolhouse was converted into a residence.

LOCAL MATTERS.

The Methodist Church was organized October 1, 1871, by Rev. B. F. Swartz, with a membership of twelve. O. A. Graham was appointed to the work, and was followed by H. J. Walker, J. H. Stewart, E. C. Brooks, Joseph Romine, I. N. Wilson and E. B. Abbott, the present pastor. A stone church edifice was begun in 1878 and completed in 1883, at a cost of $2,000. A small parsonage was also procured and served until December 1, 1882 when it was destroyed by fire. The society now numbers seventy-three. A Sabbath school was started on the first Saturday of 1883 under T. J. Rogers.

The Presbyterian Church was organized in 1872 with a membership of fifteen. Great credit is due J. T. Coldwell, until recently a citizen of Oxford, for his efforts in organizing this society; and it is mere justice to say that but for his earnest and untiring work the establishment of the church would not have been effected. Rev. S. B. Fleming was ordained and held the pastorate for some time, after which the church rather fell into decay. It was re-organized in January, 1883, by Rev. J. E. Platter, of Winfield, but as yet has no pastor. Its Trustees are I. J. Maggard, C. G. Tilton, William Sherburne, W. B. Coldwell and E. M. Mears. A church building was erected in 1873 at a cost of about $2,000. This was the first church edifice south and west of the Arkansas River.

The Baptist Church was organized on April 6, 1875, with nine members. Rev. N. L. Rigby supplied the pulpit for one year, after which came a vacancy until January 5, 1878, when Rev. Israel Harris took charge. Mr. Harris remained only three months, after which came a second vacancy. It should be mentioned here that there was another First Baptist society, which started in 1873, and merged with the younger organization on Mr. Harris's arrival. Rev. C. Gregory came September 15, 1880, and remained until December, 1881, since which time the church has been without a pastor. The society now numbers fourteen. A Sabbath school organized January 1, 1882, has an average attendance of forty-seven, and is in charge of D. F. Abbott.

The Christian Church was organized in February, 1876, with a membership of twenty. After its organization, Rev. Joseph E. Cain became its pastor, and remained fully two years. He was followed by Rev. W. Watson, who left the charge after a pastorate of less than six months. Since then there has been no regular pastor of this congregation, but service has been performed by Rev. J. E. Cain and others. Services are held in the Presbyterian Church. The present church membership is fourteen.

The Catholic Church was gathered in 1881, by Father Kelly, of Winfield, who preaches at this point on the first Sabbath of each month. The society now numbers twenty-five.

The first newspaper issued in the county was the Oxford Times, which was established in June, 1871, by Mugford & Hughes. In December of the same year it was sold to E. R. Trask, who continued the publication until March, 1872, when J. H. Folks took the office and began the issue of the Oxford Press. In 1873 the paper was removed to Wellington and the name changed to the Sumner County Press.

The Oxford Independent was established May 27, 1876, by John Blevins. In November it passed into the hands of Kelly & Benjamin, and a few months later into those of J. L. Abbott, who published it until the fall of 1878, when it was removed to Harper County.

The Oxford Enterprise was established in September, 1873, by T. J. Hadley. It soon, however, passed into the hands of Ludlow & Davidson, who continued it until May, 1874, when it died.

The Oxford Weekly Reflex, a six-column paper, of Republican proclivities, came into being on December 11, 1879, under the management of Gridley & Stump. The paper was enlarged on February 2, 1880, and on March 3, following Gridley withdrew. Stump continued the paper until September 2, 1880, when it collapsed.

The Oxford Weekly was started, as a six-column folio, on December 16, 1880, by E. F. Widner, who had purchased the office of the defunct Reflex. This seems to have been an unlucky office, as the Weekly followed the Reflex on March 11, 1881.

MILAN.

Milan was laid out in the fall of 1880, but no town company has as yet been formed. The town site of forty acres comprises land belonging to J. L. Pitts, Roland Hankins and Fred. Robson. Although not surveyed until 1880, when the K. C. L. & S. K. R. R. reached this point; the town was largely built in 1879. Its first building was the general store of W. R. Moffitt; the second the grocery of C. A. Pitts, and the third a saloon. Besides these buildings, the grocery of J. R. Ward and the drug store of Dr. William Cummings were erected in 1879. The first hotel was built in the fall of 1882, by L. K. High, who still runs it. The first birth, as well as the first death, was that of a son of I. D. Moffit. The first marriage, that of W. D. Baker and Miss Nannie Hankins. Dr. William Cummings was the first physician, R. C. Lowrey the first blacksmith, and M. Harper the first liveryman.

Milan postoffice antedates the town by several years. It was kept in a little stone house three-quarters of a mile southwest of the present town. GEUDA SPRINGS.

Geuda Springs takes its name from the seven mineral springs, which well up almost on the line between Sumner and Cowley counties. These springs have never been developed as their qualities deserve, but are destined at no far distant day to render the name of Geuda as well known as that of Saratoga, or Arkansas Hot Springs. Although so close together these springs have separate and distinct characters, the diseases which yield to one being unaffected by others. The town site lies on both sides of the county line which forms the main street. The springs and a quarter section of land in Cowley are owned by C. R. Mitchell, and the part of the town site with its additions in Sumner County by O. B. Taylor, J. P. Marshall, C. R. Mitchell, Dr. C. Perry, I. N. Hubbell and A. A. Newman, each having individual interests. The ownership of the springs has lately been vested in a company, known as the Geuda Springs Company, the shares being chiefly owned by C. R. Mitchell, the original owner of the springs. The bath-houses at the springs was built in 1881, but the principal growth of the town was made in 1882. The first house on the town site was the residence of George B. Green, the second, the drug store of G. A. Cutler, and the third, the general store of J. R. Musgrove. The first hotel was the Gueda Springs House, by James Stiner, the second, the Mekeeche, kept by John Whistler. A. J. Chapel was the first physician, and C. R. Mitchell the first attorney to locate in the town.

HUNNEWELL.

Hunnewell, tne terminus of the Sumner County Railway, is named in honor of the president of the K. C., L. & S. K. R'y., of which the first named is a branch. It is located on the old Cherokee three-mile strip, the southern town line coinciding with that of the State. The land of the town site, 400 acres, was owned by Robeson, Stewart and Hale. This was purchased by the railroad company and a town company with a capital of $50,000 formed. Stock in this company was taken by various cattle and railway men, a twelve per cent assessment made and the town laid out. The first buildings was the outfitting store of Ford & Leonard, erected June 16, 1880, the day the railway reached this point. Within a few days a host of other buildings had sprung up, and all through July of that year the town grew like a gourd. Hooker & Phelps put up the first drug store, and Roland & O'Neil the first hardware. Dr. Dobbins was the first physician, and P. M. Judd the first attorney. The first and only hotel was the Hunnewell House, completed August 20, 1880, at a cost of $5,000. This house has thirty-three rooms, and is one of the best in the county. The railway station was completed in June, 1880, and soon after the track was extended to the exact line of the territory, and a stock yard built at a cost of $7,000. The town company still exists, and has two buildings valued at $600 and $200. L. S. Boyer is agent

Prior to the organization of the city a Police Judge and two Marshals were hired by the railway company and the citizens. Such officers naturally could not draw pay in any unorganized town, and "the devil was whipped around the stump" by their appointment as special Deputy Sheriffs. The organization of the city was effected in April, 1881, and officers elected as follows: J. A. Hughes, Mayor; T. G. Ricketts, Police Judge Thomas T. Iverswas appointed City Clerk. The Council consisted of A. B. Smith, F. Hoolcroft, T. B. Sullivan, J. Dickerson, and D. F. Hall. The election of 1882 made J. A. Hughes, Mayor; L. S. Boyer, Police Judge; F. Hoolcroft, J. R. Slane, Q. A. Hale, Robert Kier, and J. C. Hopkins, Councilmen. This year had four city clerks, T. G. Ricketts, P. Zook, J. D. Hubbard and Tim. B. Sullivan.

For some time after the founding of the town it was without regular mail service. Mail for this point was brought to South Haven, and thence by boy to Hunnewell. Later, it was brought to the depot and left on the desk, where everybody picked out his own letters. On August 20, 1880, a postoffice was established and Frank Schiffdaner appointed Postmaster. He was succeeded in the spring of 1881 by George Cutter, who held the office until a year later, when J. H. Hamilton, the present incumbent, was appointed. The postoffice has successively occupied the store now occupied by Doty & Boyer, the bank building, the store now used by George Keats, and the Hamilton & Hopkins outfitting store, where it is at present located.

LOCAL MATTERS.

School District No. 156, which furnishes the educational facilities of Hunnewell, was organized in September, 1880. J. O. Brewster taught school three months in a rented building, and M. Elliott and Miss Mary Campbell taught a term each, under the same conditions. A stone building, 28x40 feet, and costing $2,500 was built in 1881-82. This was occupied in 1881-82 by John Hubbard and wife, and in 1882-83 by Ira Sikes. The school enumeration is one hundred and two.

There are no church edifices in the city, and no resident pastors. The Presbyterians effected an organization two years ago, and are now supplied by Rev. Mr. Moore of Wellington. They have also a Sabbath school with an attendance of forty.

The Methodist Church was also organized in 1880, and for a year was supplied by Rev. B. F. Swartz, but now has no regular services.

In July, 1880, J. S. Danford established a bank at this point. This was run one month by Smith & Martin, and from that time till its failure in November, 1881, by P. B. Bowers. Just prior to its collapse it was incorporated as a State bank.

The Hamilton Bank.—On February 1, 1882, P. B. Bowers started a private bank in the Danford building, and May, 1, moved into the stone bank building, which he had erected at a cost of $1,200. Here he transacted business until January 15, 1883, when he sold to John H. Hamilton & Co., who now carry on the business.

Gee, and the livery stable of Q. A. Hale. Dr. J. T. Spruil, the first physician, came in 1872. The South Haven Town Company was formed in June, 1879, and consisted of F. F. Meister, C. E. Beard, J. The railway reached this point in June, 1879, and it was supposed would make this its terminal station, but difficulties arose between the road and the town company, and the track was pushed on to Hunnewell.

ARGONIA.

Argonia is a live little town, of about 100 inhabitants, located on the K. C. L. & S. K. Railroad, near the west line of the county. It was laid out in February, 1881, by a town company, of which Joseph Hollowell was president, D. B. Harrison, vice president, J. S. Hammond, treasurer, and M. L. March, secretary. The company purchased the town site of 70 acres from M. and J. P. Sumpter, H. W. Allen and L. Berlett. The mill property is encircled by, but is not a part of, the townsite. Up to July, 1882, the town made but little progress, although lots were given all who would erect improvements to the value of $100, in the business part of the town. Residence lots were also given to those who would build upon them. The first store in the town was brought from the river by A. B. Cook, and opened with a general stock. A post office was soon opened, and Cook made Postmaster. A few months later he sold out to L. L. Crites, who soon after took the post office, which he still holds. The second store was opened by Story & Stevenson, and the third by Bryant & Anderson. A drug store was opened by J. S. Baughman, who was the first physician to locate here. A lumber yard was started by G. B. Shaw & Co., before Argonia was more than a name; the lumber being dumped upon the bare prairie. Carson, Baldwin & Salter started the first hardware store, and George Monyhan the first meat market. The town has never been incorporated, and is still in the hands of the town company, whose officers are: J. S. Baughman, president; M. Sumpter, vice president; M. L. March, treasurer; E. Spencer, secretary.

The Argonia Mills form a very prominent feature of the town, and were in existence before the building of the place was fairly begun. Work was begun on the buildings in March, 1882, and the machinery put in operation on September 12th, of the same year. The mills grind 300 bushels of wheat and something over 200 bushels of corn, daily. Two run of buhr-stones are in use, and power is furnished by an engine of fifty horse power. The mill building is 46x30 feet, and two and one-half stories in height. The entire outfit costing $14,000, is owned by J. S. Hammond & Co. The town now has two general stores, one drug and one hardware; a good hotel, built in 1882, by Levi Carkhuff; a meat-market, two blacksmith shops, a livery and a lumber yard. Three regular grain buyers make headquarters at this point, and from July, 1882, to January, 1883, shipped over 50,000 bushels of grain, mostly wheat.

Here he formed a co-partnership with J. H. Wemple, for the purpose of engaging in the Texas cattle trade, and in the spring of 1869 went to Abilene, on Smoky River. In the spring of 1870 he was located on the Cow Skin on the Twenty-mile Cherokee Strip, Sedgwick County, with the intention of raising cattle, but greatly to his surprise, before another winter set in, about all the lands between the Cow Skin and Ninnescah rivers, were taken up by settlers. He went west into London, on what was known as the Thirty Mile Cherokee Strip, lands not yet surveyed, where he took a squatter's claim, cutting hay and feeding stock for a year, when he pre-empted 160 acres in Section 4. In 1876, gathering up the fragments of his property, he found that he had $8,000, and with this he moved to Sumner County, Kas., and bought 160 acres in Section 31, Downs Township, to his original purchase he has added from time to time, till recently, after having given one of his sons 320 acres of land, he has 1,500 acres left. He has 650 acres under cultivation, and 250 acres fenced with wire and plank. He has on his place 200 apple, 2,000 peach, and three acres of forest trees. His crop of 1882 was 10,000 bushels corn, 2,300 bushels wheat, and $11,500 worth of cattle and hogs, and has now on hand about $12,000 worth of personal property. He has facilities for handling a large number of cattle, and connected with his stock yards is a four-ton stock scale. He also has a fine residence, and a first-class barn. Mr. Williams is a member of the School Board of his district, and Clerk of the same, and belongs to the Masonic Fraternity. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a class leader. In 1856, he was married to Miss Casander Stubblefield, of McLean County, Ill., and has five children—John S., Isaac, Sarah, Francis Marion, and Carlan Henry. Mrs. Williams is also a member of the Methodist Episcopal. She was an adopted daughter of the late Isaac Funk of Illinois.

PHILLIPS COUNTY.

PHILLIPS County, in the northern tier of counties in Kansas, on the Nebraska line, is the ninth county west from the east line of the State, and fifth east from the dividing line between Kansas and Colorado.

The surface of the county is generally undulating, with broad valleys, and gently sloping prairies; about fifteen per cent bottom lands, eighty per cent table and upland prairie, and five per cent timber; average width of bottoms one and a half miles; average width of timber belts along streams, one-eighth of a mile.

The climate is exceptionally fine; it is the equable mien between the high cold north and the low, humid south. About on the 39.80 parallel of latitude, mild in temperature; its elevation of about two thousand feet above the level of the sea gives the tone and crispness of a rare, clear atmosphere. Snow storms are not frequent, and snow rarely lies on the ground more than a week or ten days. The rolling prairies are bare most of the winter months, and excepting an occasional storm, the winters are bright, dry and open, admitting of pleasant out-door work. The sun shines the greater part of every day of the year, and the skies are bright and genial. The deep snows, long, cold seasons, mud, alternate freezing and thawing, so common farther east in Illinois, Iowa, and Indiana, and New York and New England, are almost unknown in Phillips and adjoining counties. The rare, clear atmosphere gives a wonderful range of vision, tone and vitality to every form of animal and vegetable life. The bright skies, pure water and life-inspiring atmosphere give to man and animals the inspiration of youth. No other section can show a lower rate of mortality than the northern tier of Kansas counties. Malarial diseases are almost unknown.

Phillips County is abundantly supplied with the celebrated white magnesian limestone, which has no superior for building purposes. For beauty and durability it is unexcelled. It is easily dressed by the mason's hammer, or sawed or planed as may be desired. This stone is white as marble and nearly as soft as plaster of paris when taken from the quarry, and, remarkable as it may seem, when exposed to the air it changes from a softened state to a firm and durable rock, which will stand the wear of ages. Clay suitable for the manufacture of brick is also found in all parts of the county, and the quality is pronounced equal to any in the West. The water supply of Phillips County is ample. The north fork of Solomon River, Deer Creek, Prairie Dog Creek and Bow Creek are the principal streams. These all have numerous tributaries, and on each is found abundance of timber for fuel and all practical purposes. Nearly all are fed by springs which never become dry. No county in the state has a better water supply. With its excellent mill privileges Phillips County may become the seat of extensive manufacturing, and it already has, (as will be seen in another place) extensive flouring mills, but it must always depend mainly on agriculture for its wealth.

The soil of Phillips, like adjoining counties, consists of a rich, black vegetable mould, of from two to five feet in depth, in places even deeper. This is underlaid by a subsoil of a porous, spongy nature, which alike forms a system of perfect drainage of the upper soil during wet periods, and retains much moisture during drouth. Owing to this subsoil the lands are capable of enduring dry weather better than those of more eastern states. The soil of the bottom lands is occasionally slightly sandy, and yet is so filled with organic matter and mineral fertilizers as to be practically inexhaustible. The peculiar characteristics of the lands are: First, They are easily worked, and after two or three years cultivation they become as pliable as garden mould. Second, Moisture is absorbed so readily that a plow can be run through within a few hours after the heaviest rain. Third, The land holds this moisture by reason of the retentive character of the subsoil, and gives it back to the plant root by capillary attraction when moisture is needed. Fourth, As soon as the frost has gone the land is ready for the plow, the moisture having been absorbed by the subsoil in the same way that the rains are absorbed and retained; consequently, plowing, harrowing and sowing can be commenced in February and March, and some seasons even earlier. In consequence of the great advantages in soil, only half the usual care is necessary to produce crops, although the good old rule, "no excellence without labor," holds good even here, and the most intelligent, industrious farmers produce the best crops. No section in the world is more abundant in varied agricultural resources. Wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, flax, castor beans, sweet and Irish potatoes, field and garden vegetables, buckwheat, millet, Hungarian, sorghum, tobacco, hemp and broom corn all find congenial soil. All may be made a success in culture. In a section so well adapted to mixed husbandry no man should confine himself to a single crop.

As a stock-raising county Phillips is admirably adapted, and as the county fills up and the farmers become more able, financially, much attention is being paid to this branch of business. Water, feed and range are abundant, the climate is agreeable to all animals, and what more is wanted to insure success? The following figures show a healthy increase during the past three years: In 1879, there were in Phillips County 4,962 head of cattle; in 1882, 9,076, an increase in three years of 4,114 head. In 1879 there were 2,450 sheep in the county; in 1882, 4,686, an increase in three years of 2,450. The natural supply of nutritious grasses make it a superior cattle and sheep country, and next year's statistics will show a marvelous increase over the present figures. Attention is being directed to the culture of artificial forests, which in a few years will furnish an abundance of fire wood, fencing, and timber for other purposes. In 1881 there were 1,134 acres of artificial forests in the county, the varieties of timber consisting of walnut, maple, honey-locust, ash, cottonwood, etc. The amount planted to timber in 1882 will double the acreage of the previous season, and without exception it is having a luxuriant growth.

EARLY HISTORY.

The first settlement in Phillips County was made in 1869, and the first bona fide settler (who came to stay) was C. J. Van Allen, who pre-empted a farm just east of Kirwin. He built the first log house in the county, and his father-in-law, Samuel Bales, (now of Kirwin) erected the first frame house in Phillips County. Previous to this time, however, the government sent an officer (Col. Kirwin, for whom the principal town in the county was named) who erected a stockade fort, just after the close of the war, to prevent the encroachments of roaming bands of Cheyennes, Omahas, Pawnees and other Indians, and for protection of overland California emigrants. The fort was erected on what is now the Lyman Perkins farm, one and a half miles southwest of Kirwin. This stockade was abandoned by the government with the advent of the early settlers. In 1870 the Indians became troublesome and the following named settlers built a stockade in the east part of what is now Kirwin to flee for safety in case of an attack from the savages: The Van Allen brothers, S. Brigham, N. S. Drew, Wm. Dunbar, I. V. Lee, H. P. Gandy, Adolphus and Albert Hall, J. Stovall, Richard Chutes, Richard Corcoran, Thomas Cox, Sr., and sons, John Butler, W. M. Cadwell, James Forbes. The stockade was constructed of logs, 50x90 feet. The logs, ten feet long, were placed endwise in the ground. Frequent bands of Pawnees and Omahas passed and repassed the neighborhood as they went and returned from hunting excursions, and though they occasionally exhibited hostile symptoms no actual outrages were committed. The preparation to meet any outbreak in a prompt manner deterred the Indians from the commission of outrages. The early settlers were fearless men and would not have brooked insults from the sons of the forest.

In the winter of 1871 a party from Kirwin, consisting of W. T. Belford, J. S. Shurtz, and several others, were hunting on Prairie Dog Creek, on the border of the county, when they encountered a roving band of the hostiles who chased them many miles before they reached protection. The chase lasted one day and part of the night, and their lives were only spared by the trusty steeds that bore them from the place of danger.

Following C. J. Van Allen to what is now Phillips County came W. R. Shleppey, who made a settlement in Solomon Township in the spring of 1871. In a short time he moved to Logan, where he still resides. William Roberts staked off the first land in Logan Township. John Mercer was the first settler in Phillipsburg Township, in 1871, and continued to reside there for several years. James Forbes was the first settler in Plum Township, where he entered a quarter section of land under the homestead law in 1871, and despite of threatened danger from hostile Indians, he bravely stuck to his home, and still resides where he "drove his stakes" eleven years ago. Donald McDonald settled in Crystal Township in 1872, and John Wheeler was the first settler in Long Island Township in 1871. The first school house erected in Phillips was built in Kirwin in 1873, and the first church edifice was erected in Phillipsburg in 1879. Dustin & Cottrell, at Kirwin, and Dustin & Close, at Phillipsburg, were the pioneers in the mercantile business. The first flouring mills were erected by Skinner, of Kirwin, and McClellan and Hanson, in Logan. The first marriage in the county was Frank Gray and Jennie Shleppey, of Logan Township, March 9, 1872. The first birth was John Logan Graff, of Logan Township, April, 1872. The first postoffice established in Phillips County was at Kirwin in 1871. The first settlers directed their attention mainly to hunting buffalo, and it is related that when the first camp meeting was held in the county in 1871, two of the reverend clergy (Methodists) went forth armed with rifles and slaughtering two buffaloes they had them conveyed to the camp grounds and choice pieces were cooked to appease the hunger of all who chose to partake.

The tide of emigration began in earnest in 1873, but was interrupted in 1874 on account of the destruction of the grain crops and all growing vegetation by the grasshoppers, whose ravages were general that year in both Kansas and Nebraska. The season of 1875 brought forth a large yield of grain and many new settlers, and was followed by successful seasons until 1880, at which time the county contained a population of 12,617, and with 90,857 acres of land under cultivation; some fifty church organizations; one hundred and four school districts and four newspapers. The following year of drouth discouraged many and there was a preceptible decrease in population, but this temporary check of 1881 was followed by good crops the present season, and it is safe to predict that during the next decade Phillips County will contain an intelligent population of thirty thousand people.

The Kirwin Land District, up to July 1, 1881, comprised the following counties and parts of counties: Ranges nine and ten, and townships one to ten inclusive of Jewell, Mitchell and Lincoln counties, and Smith, Osborne, Phillips, Rooks, Norton, Graham, Decatur, Sheridan, Rawlins, Thomas, Cheyenne and Sherman. In the district now are the same in Jewell, Mitchell and Lincoln counties, and Smith, Osborne, Phillips, Rooks, and four ranges, including range twenty-four in Norton and Graham counties. The officers up to May, 1876, were A. A. Thomas and J. M. Hodge, now register of land office at Salina, as receiver. From May 1, 1876, to July, 1878, F. Campbell, was register and J. M. Hodge receiver; then L. J. Best was appointed receiver and T. M. Helm register. On the 8th of July, 1882, L. J. Best gave way to R. R. Hays, as receiver. There are at this time 100,000 acres of public land in the Kirwin land district. Since the establishment of the office in Kirwin the following entries have been made: 17,700 home entries; 8,500 timber entries; 19,000 pre-emption filings; 3,500 homestead (soldier) declaratory; 5,000 final homestead; 20 final timber culture and 2,900 cash sales.

The following is a list of the postoffices of Phillips County: Big Bend, Bow Creek, Dickeyville, Fredericksburg, Goode, Germantown, Jimtown, Kirwin, Logan, Long Island, Mattison, Mound, Myrtle, Marvin, Nance, Phillipsburg, Pleasant Green, Prairie View and West Cedar.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION AND COUNTY OFFICERS.

In 1872 the county was organized, taking its name from a gallant private soldier of the Union army, and was originally divided into seven townships, as follows: Crystal, Long Island, Solomon, Kirwin, Phillipsburg, Logan and Plum. Phillipsburg was selected as the county seat. An ineffectual attempt was made to change the seat of justice to Kirwin two or three years since, but the Commissioners refused to call an election.

The first election for county officers was held in the fall of 1872, and the following named persons were elected: Treasurer, Thomas Cox, Jr.; Clerk, Henry McDowell; Register of Deeds, J. W. Kidd; Surveyor, H. W. Bean; Probate Judge, J. S. Shurtz; Superintendent of Public Instruction, P. I. Hitchcock, Commissioners, Thos. Cox, Sr., A. W. Tracy and James Large; County Attorney, W. H. Gray. The last named gentleman failing to qualify, Geo. W. Stinson was appointed and discharged the duties. Of those first chosen county officials, A. W. Tracy, Thomas Cox, Jr., J. W. Kidd and Geo. W. Stinson are still residents of the county.

The following named persons have filled the several county offices since the election of the above named:

County Clerks.—The first County Clerk was I. V. Lee (appointed by the Governor), Henry McDowell, Cyrus Hinkenlooper, J. H. Laird, J. H. Lowe, now serving his second term.

Representatives.—Noah Weaver, John Bissell, (three terms) Rev. E. J. Jewett, Frank Lozier, W. L. Morgan.

CHURCHES OF THE COUNTY.

The first Congregational Church in the county was organized in Kirwin, October —, 1875, Rev. G. O. Blake, pastor. The following members were present: Rev. G. O. Blake, Rev. M. Young, Martha Young, Emily Hershey, A. H. Rugg, Angeline Clipt, William Clipt, Jr. Rev. Mr. Blake ministered to the church two and a half years. He was succeeded by Rev. Mr. Jarrold, who remained one year. In March, 1880, Rev. T. F. Norris was chosen as pastor, and has since acted as pastor. Under his supervision a handsome church, 28x40, has been built, at a cost of $2,000. A flourishing Sunday-school is connected with the church. There are five other Congregational Churches in the county, to wit: Bissell Creek, Iowa Union, West Cedar, Plum Creek and Prairie View. There is but one church edifice of the denominations in this county. The number of persons attached to the several Congregational Churches in Phillips County is 154.

Rev. Allen Enyart, now on the Germantown work, organized the first Methodist Episcopal class in Phillips County. It was called Kildare class. John Sheckler was first class leader. The meetings were held seven miles west of Kirwin, in what is now Marvin. The members were Thomas Cox, John Sheckler and wife, William Ray and wife, Allen Ward and wife, and Harry Hill. The first meeting was held at John Sheckler's house, September 11, 1870. The first camp meeting in this county was held on Deer Creek, eight miles northwest of Kirwin. The fruit of the meeting was seventy-five additions to the Methodist Episcopal, United Brethren, and Baptist Churches. The meeting was commenced by Rev. A. Enyart and Rev. Henry Worley, a local preacher of the M. E. Church. The United Brethren and Baptists date their church organizations from the time of that meeting. Elder Hitchcock, of the Baptist Church, (who preached the first sermon in Phillips County), and Rev. Thomas Curry, of the U. B. Church, assisted in the camp meeting. Previous to the commencement of the religious exercises, Messrs. Enyart and Worley took their rifles, and, after a short hunt, returned to camp and brought two buffaloes. The meat was barbecued, and all partook of a hearty meal before the real work of the meeting began. The animals were killed at the foot of Sugar Loaf Mound, twenty miles southwest of Kirwin. The Methodist Episcopals have nine church organizations in this county, at Phillipsburg, Marvin, Logan, Kirwin, Bow Creek, High Prairie, Prairie View, Sugar Loaf and Long Island. They have five clergymen in the regular ministerial work, and two local preachers. The total county membership of the Methodist Episcopals in Phillips County is estimated at 250—considerably larger than other branches of the Christian Church. Their largest membership and most commodious house of worship is at Kirwin, where they have a house 36x50. Rev. Mr. Casely, preacher in charge.

The Baptists organized in this county (at Kirwin) early in 1873. Elder Hitchcock was the first clergyman, succeeded by Elders Homan, Higgins, and the present Elder is W. C. Archer. The first deacons of this organization were Peter Donn, J. Pasko, Mrs. Hall; Trustees, F. W. Donn, Martha Nobles; Mrs. Ollie Charles, clerk. The Baptists of this church hold their meetings every alternate Sunday in [illegible]mp's hall, Kirwin. The Baptists also have church organizations at Phillipsburg (Elder Archer), and at one other point in the county. They number 162 members.

The Presbyterians have two church organizations and thirty-five members; three Methodists, two churches, and fifty-five members; Roman Catholics, two organizations and seventy-five members; Protestant Episcopalians established a mission at Kirwin, July 8, 1882, with a membership of fourteen. T. J. Pickett is lay reader.

PRESS HISTORY.

Since the organization of the county the following newspaper ventures have been started and suspended: The Sentinel, started in Phillipsburg in 1874, but discontinued in a few weeks. The Kirwin Progress, established in 1874, was continued a few years and failed. The Phillipsburg Advance, a five column, Republican paper, started in 1877, was continued until the following year and then stopped. The Phillips County Democrat succeeded to the Advance in July, 1878, and was the first Democratic paper started in northwestern Kansas. After a fitful existence of one year its publication was discontinued.

At the present time there are four weekly journals published in Phillips County—two at Kirwin, one at Phillipsburg and one at Logan.

The oldest paper in northwestern Kansas is the Kirwin Chief, established in August, 1872, by W. D. Jenkins, under the direction of the Kirwin Town Company. It was continued under that management until the winter of 1874, when the press was purchased by A. A. Thomas, then of the United States land office, located in Kirwin. In the fall of 1876 it passed into the hands of A. G. McBride, and was moved to Phillipsburg, but the following spring was returned to Kirwin. Mr. McBride purchased steam machinery, a large jobbing outfit, and made the office first-class in every respect. During his management the Chief secured business from a wide extent of country. In July, 1881, he disposed of the office to Horace Moulton, L. J. Best, A. Stockman, A. Weaver, H. C. Wey, Thos. Fife, W. T. Belford, the Bank of Kirwin, W. E. Rowe, and several other parties. These parties, under the name of the "Kirwin Chief Steam Printing Company," with Geo. W. Wood, Thos. G. Nicklin, and A. L. Topliff, as editors, during their term of ownership, conducted the paper until July 1, 1882, when it passed into the hands of T. J. and H. G. Pickett, by whom it is now managed. The Chief has been a Republican journal from the start.

The Phillipsburg Herald, (Republican) was established in the early part of 1878, with Charles F. Jenkins as editor. In September following, G. W. Stinson purchased the office and again started it at No. 1, Vol I. Soon afterwards Ed. F. Korns purchased a half interest, and excepting three months interregnum, Mr. Korns has been and continues the principal manager of the Herald. He is now editor and manager for the Herald Printing Company.

The Independent was established in Harlan, Smith County, December, 1879, by Wm. A. Garritson and Charles H. Topliff. In December, 1880, was removed to Kirwin, where its publication is continued by the same firm. The Independent is a five column quarto, and is an exponent of the Greenback or anti-monopoly party.

The Logan Enterprise, a neatly printed seven column folio, was started in July, 1879, by Fouke & Swartout, and in April, 1880, W. W. Gray, the present publisher and editor became connected with the office, and made it one of the brightest and most newsy Republican papers of the northwest. Connected with the Enterprise is a well-stocked job office. Mr. Gray is receiving a fair share of patronage.

RAILROADS AND COUNTY SOCIETIES.

During the year 1880 the Central Branch of the Union Pacific Railroad was finished through the southern border of the county, passing through Kirwin on the east and Logan on the west, extending beyond into Norton. This road is of incalculable benefit to the people of the county, furnishing them transportation facilities with Atchison and the Eastern markets. As a goodly portion of the products of Phillips and other northwestern counties could find a profitable market in Colorado, it is hoped at no distant day the Central Branch will be extended to Denver.

Horticulture.—Little progress has yet been made in horticulture, though the soil and climate are well adapted for apples, peaches, pears, plums and cherries. At the present time there are a few hundred of these trees in bearing. The present season exhibits an abundant yield, and it is to be hoped more attention will be paid to this interesting branch of the farmers' business. Two Fair Associations have been formed in this section. In the year 1877 the counties of Rooks, Osborne, Smith, Norton and Phillips organized a District Fair Association, and for three years had very successful meetings at Kirwin and other points.

The first elected President was James Scott, of Phillips County. He held two terms, and was succeeded by D. H. Moulton, also of Phillips County. The meetings were then discontinued, probably caused by the organization of county agricultural societies in the counties composing the district. The Phillips County Fair Association held its first meeting in 1878 at Phillipsburg, and had a successful meeting on that and the two succeeding years, but the short crops of last year caused a temporary suspension. The present season, however, revives the interest, and the friends of agriculture in the county have again come together and elected officers, determined to have another annual exhibition. The following is a list of the officers of the association: D. L. Smith, President; W. F. Woodward, Treasurer; J. W. Lowe, Secretary. The Board of Directors consists of D. L. Smith, J. W. Lowe, J. H. Hebencroft, J. M. Crosier, J. B. Ham, W. F. Woodward, J. J. Clark. The annual meetings are held at the county seat.

MANUFACTURES AND STATISTICS.

The manufacturing interests of Phillips County, aside from grist mills, are insignificant. The first saw mill in the county was that of Dean & Parsons, in Kirwin, in 1872. There are at this time several portable saw mills in various parts of the county. The grist mills of the county are: Skinner & Adams' mill, at Kirwin, built in 1873. These gentlemen are the pioneers in the flour making business in Phillips County; Long Island mill, on Prairie Dog Creek, built in 1877 by Birdwall, (two run of stones), and now owned by Mitzke; Peter Hanson's Logan mill, built in 1875, has four run of stone; Marvin has two mills, the stone mill, built in 1879, by Baker, now operated by Bureman & Co., has two run of stone; and the Marvin mill, (three run of stone), owned by Osterman Bros., and run by Hanson & Troup, of Logan. The grist mills manufacture excellent brands of flour, and in addition to supplying the home demand, some of them ship their products East and West on the line of the Central Branch Railroad.

In the beginning of 1882, Williams, Duff & Co., of Kirwin, established a creamery on the Solomon, near the southern limits of the city, and the first six months since its establishment, shows it to be a perfect success. They use the cream from 300 cows, and their butter is pronounced A No. 1 in both the Denver and Chicago markets, readily commanding the highest prices. They make at the present time (August 14, 1882), about 1,500 pounds per week and are gradually increasing their sales.

The first census, taken in 1875, showed the population of this county to be 2,813. Three years later it had increased to 5,436, distributed in the several townships as follows; Crystal, 483; Long Island, 800; Solomon, 449; Kirwin, 1,118; Phillipsburg, 1,287; Logan, 481; Plum, 818. Two years later the population had more than doubled, but during the last year, owing to discouraging drouth, there was a slight falling off.

The first school in the county was in District No. 1, and was taught by Wm. Albaugh, in September, 1872. In 1878 when the first reliable school statistics were gathered, there were sixty-three school districts in Phillips County, and thirty school houses. In 1879 the number of school districts had increased to seventy, with seventy-three teachers. The average pay of teachers in the county during 1879 was $35.69 for males, and $25.00 for females. Twenty school houses were built during the year, and school property was valued at $7,950. The entire assessed valuation of property for 1879 was $380,986.00. In 1880 the number of school districts had increased to 108. The United States census of 1880 showed a population of 12,042. The census of school population for the year was reported as 3,708, an increase of 778 in one year. Number of pupils enrolled in the public schools, 2,944, with a daily average attendance of 1,186. PHILLIPSBURG.

The county seat of Phillips County, termed "the city of the hills," so called on account of its location on the uplands of Deer Creek, was named in honor of Col. Phillips, formerly a member of Congress from Kansas, who had been a steadfast friend of the town. The location of the town is beautiful and commanding, and affords a superb view of the surrounding country. The town is symmetrically laid out, with a spacious public square, in the center of which stands a handsome, commodious brick court house, erected last year at a cost of about eight thousand dollars.

The town was located and laid out in 1872 by a party from Doniphan County, Kansas, consisting of Samuel Plattner, J. H. Close and E. S. Dean. Mr. Plattner erected the first house in the place, hauling the lumber from Doniphan County, a distance of over two hundred and fifty miles. This was the only building erected in the year 1872, and was utilized as a residence, hotel and store, Messrs. Sayer & Dutton opening therein the first stock of goods brought to Phillipsburg.

In 1872 Governor Harvey issued a proclamation organizing the county of Phillips, and designating Phillipsburg as the county seat, the Governor stating in his proclamation that he organized the county in "compliance with the petition of the people of Kirwin, and located the county seat in compliance with the petition of the people of Phillipsburg." At that time there was not a building in Phillipsburg, but a town company had been organized and a charter obtained, and Samuel Plattner was preparing to build. The following named persons were appointed provisional officers to conduct the affairs of the new county: I. N. Lee, Clerk; John Castello, James Large and G. L. Dustin, Commissioners. The first school house was erected in 1873, and the same year a postoffice was established with Fred. A. Dutton as postmaster. Previous to this time the mails were carried by the citizens of the village, who with the true spirit of Western pioneers, raised a subscription and ran a daily hack to Kirwin, the principal town in the new county. In 1874 the Phillipsburg postoffice was designated as a money order office.

F. J. Dutcher and wife was the first family to settle in the town, arriving in the fall of 1872. Henry McDowell, Phil. Townley, Michael Mann, Wm. Bissell, Leffingwell & Rogers, and Geo. W. Stinson, all settled in the town as early as 1873. C. H. Leffingwell & Rogers and Mann began merchandizing in 1873. The city has had but two postmasters. The first, F. A. Dutton, retained the office six years and was then succeeded by the present incumbent, H. C. Spaulding.

In point of business importance and population (400 inhabitants) Phillipsburg is the second town in the county, and contains an intelligent, moral and energetic class of citizens. Nearly every class of business is represented. There are five general merchandise stores, two hardware, two drug stores, two notions and harness, two groceries, one furniture dealer, two milliners, one bank, one baker and confectioner, three hotels, the Central, National and Iowa, two livery stables, two blacksmiths, one barber, one newspaper, five attorneys, one physician, one lumber yard, two resident clergymen, Methodist and Presbyterian.

The earliest settlers of the town were Fred. A. Dutton, Samuel Plattner and A. W. Tracey, who were quickly followed by many persons who settled in the place as soon as the county seat question was determined in favor of Phillipsburg.

Mrs. F. T. Dutcher was the first lady settler. The first child born in the town was A. M. Shelley, in the winter of 1873. The first marriage occurred November 19, 1873, A. M. Hitchcock and Carrie A. Smith. The first death in the new settlement was a stranger who perished in a storm in the winter of 1872, three months later a man named Nelson died.

Phillipsburg was organized as a city of the third class in 1880. H. L. Sprague was the first mayor, succeeded by G. W. Stinson, Elihu Davis, present incumbent. The city marshals: Wm. Featherly, Geo. Ferguson, Wm. Beck, present incumbent. Clerks: Ed. Korns, E. E. Davis, Ed. Korns, present incumbent. Councilmen: C. H. Leffingwell, G. A. Spaulding, F. A. Dutton, D. B. Bailey, Frank Strain. Present members, G. W. Young, F. Strain, H. C. Sprague, F. E. Winship, J. W. Lowe.

The first school was taught in the town in 1873, in a school house near the public square, by Cyrus Hinkenlooper. The first school house was erected during that year, on the northeast of the square. The first sermon was preached in Samuel Plattner's house in the fall of 1872, by Rev. A. Hitchcock. The first church edifice erected in Phillipsburg, south of public square, was by the Baptists, in 1879. This handsome house was destroyed by the terrible tornado of June 24, 1882, but an effort is now being made to rebuild. Jacob Close built a sawmill in the west part of town in the spring of 1873.

In 1873 while the District Court was in session in Phillipsburg, and a trial for horse stealing was in progress, great excitement was caused by the announcement that an immense herd of buffalo was in sight. The court was adjourned in confusion and Judge, jury and witnesses armed themselves as best they could and instantly gave chase and several of the herd were killed. The preceding year a settler followed a herd of buffalo on a white Texas pony, and succeeded in killing several of them before they got beyond his unerring rifle.

On the 23d of June, 1882, a fearful electrical storm visited the city and destroyed property to the amount of $12,000. Fifteen buildings were blown down, among the number the Baptist Church, a handsome and commodious frame structure, 40x50 feet in size. The great wonder to those who surveyed the ruins was that there was no loss of life. The heaviest losses were, Mr. Blackman, residence torn down and scattered in every direction; the house of Mr. Nash, just opposite, totally destroyed; the court house unroofed; residence of C. W. Snodgrass destroyed and household goods scattered to the winds; many buildings and barns were also partially destroyed. The inhabitants describe the storm as frightful and never wish to look upon its like again.

KIRWIN.

The first settlements in Phillips County were made in the vicinity of Kirwin, the fine farming lands in the vicinity and the beautiful location of the place, near the Solomon River attracting settlers. The natural advantages of the place and the energy of its business men have made it one of the most noted and prosperous young cities in the Solomon valley. Kirwin is situated three miles from the east and seven miles from the south line of the county, near the north bank of the Solomon river, at the mouths of Deer and Bow creeks. It was the first railroad station in the county, the Central Branch of the Union Pacific Railroad having reached there in November, 1879. The government land office, (the details of the business of which may be found incorporated in the history of Phillips County), was removed from Cawker City to Kirwin in 1875, and the land transactions for several counties centering at Kirwin has greatly aided in building up the town. The town was incorporated as a city of the third class in 1878. The business of the place is represented by five general stores, three drug houses, three agricultural implement stores, four groceries, three confectioneries, three restaurants, two hardware stores, four hotels, two harness shops, one wholesale and retail furniture house, one meat market, one bank, barber shop, marble works, two newspaper offices, six law and land firms, four physicians, four livery and sale stables, one gunsmith, one billiard hall, two blacksmiths. The Methodists and Congregationalists have neat and commodious houses of worship, and regular services every Sabbath. The Baptists and Episcopalians also have church organizations, and have regular services, but no church buildings. There are Sunday-schools connected with the two first named churches, and together they number about one hundred and eighty scholars. One of the handsomest school buildings in the Solomon valley is located in Kirwin. It is a large two-story house, built of magnesian lime stone, and erected three years since at a cost of $9,000. The building has a seating capacity of three hundred. Several substantial stone and brick buildings, in addition to the school house, have been erected during the past three or four years, among them the Warner House, Belford Block, Moulton Block, Commercial Hotel, Kirwin Bank building.

The first settlers in Kirwin and vicinity came in 1869. The first actual settler was C. J. Van Allen. John Lindsey was the first homesteader, coming soon after Van Allen, and taking land in what is now Valley Township. The town was named in honor of Col. Kirwin who was sent to this section of country soon after the war of the rebellion, and erected a stockade on what is now the Lyman Perkins farm, one mile and a half southwest of town. The chief object in the erection of the stockade was the protection of the overland emigrants to California. After a year or two the "fort" was abandoned and Col. Kirwin was removed to another section of the country. Among the early settlers were H. P. Gandy, Isaac V. Lee, Capt. Chute, Rollin Calkins, J. C. Hale, C. J. Lamb, E. L. Dustin, W. T. Belford, Joseph Wood, B. F. Lozier, now P. M. of Kirwin, A. B. Parsons, A. Weaver, S. Brigham, N. S. Drew, the Hill brothers, Richard Corcoran, John Butler, Wm. Cadwell, James and Forbes. The stockade built by these early settlers in 1871, afterwards served as a "store" where Capt. Chute and Joseph Wood sold whisky, flour, tobacco, powder and shot, and traded for buffalo robes and furs. The first birth in Kirwin was a child of Judge Shurtz in 1873. The first marriage of which any authentic account can be obtained was Ephraim Kincaid and Miss Watson in 1872. The first death in Kirwin was a child of Joseph Penewell, in 1874. The Kirwin Town Company, organized in 1871, consisted of C. J. Van Allen, William Pounds, E. L. Dean, B. F. Lozier and A. B. Parsons. They made a claim on four quarter sections covering the town and vicinity, and the last named, Dean, Parsons and Lozier owned fifty-seven of the original one hundred shares. The first general store in the town was built by C. J. Van Allen for Geo. Mundy, and stood near the spot now occupied by D. H. Moulton's dwelling house. The second store house was built on East Main street and stood on ground now occupied by A. Stockman's residence. Dean & Parsons bought and set up on the Solomon River, near Kirwin, in the spring of 1872, a steam sawmill, undoubtedly the first steam mill started in Kirwin. The first school was taught in Kirwin in 1873 by Miss Maggie Shurtz, who gave lessons in her own home in the south part of town. The same year a school house was erected on the school square in the northwest part of town, between Second and Third streets. Three years since the first-built school house was removed to give place to the present elegant stone public school building.

The first sermon was preached in town by Rev. Mr. Hitchcock, a Baptist minister, in 1872, in a frame shanty on the north bank of the Solomon, and it was not until 1879 that a church building was erected, the Methodists being the pioneers.

The first postoffice was established in 1871 and H. P. Gandy was appointed postmaster. He retained office but six months. C. L. Dustin was appointed and held the place one year; then W. T. Belford was chosen and remained in office eight years. One year since B. F. Lozier, the present incumbent, received the appointment. The money order system was established in Kirwin in 1877. The salary of the Postmaster is $1,400. The first regular store was opened in May, 1872, on the south side of East Main street, by Dustin, Cottrell, Nixon & Co. Dustin soon retired from the firm and left the country, and the following year the store was removed to a new building erected on the south side of the public square.

Kirwin was charted as a city July 24, 1880. The first officers were: Horace Moulton, Mayor; F. Campbell, W. T. Belford, E. W. Warner, W. D. Jenkins, J. H. Skinner, Councilmen; C. E. Russell, Marshal; C. E. Don Carlos, Clerk; H. J. Cameron, Treasurer. Horace Moulton was re-elected Mayor, and was succeeded by A. B. Stoddart, then Horace Moulton was again elected. At the last election Col. F. Campbell was chosen. Present officers: F. Campbell, Mayor; J. H. Skinner, Dr. R. H. Trusdle, F. L. Ingersoll, A. Stockman and Thomas Fife, Councilmen; George Noble, Marshal; H. E. Campbell, Clerk; M. H. Wilson, Treasurer. Council meets in regular sessions the first Monday in every month.

There were Indian scares in both 1871 and 1872. The people of Kirwin and the adjacent settlements were notified that bands of hostile Sioux, Pawnees and Omahas would certainly attack them. In fact several bands of the savages came to the immediate vicinity. Full preparations were made for a vigorous resistance. All retired to the stockade, taking their few women and "plunder" with them, but no attacks came. The Indians only "paid" a few debts to whites who had mistreated them.

In July, 1872, three children of Duncan Potts and wife, who had just arrived from Iowa, were drowned by a water-spout, west of Kirwin. The family were encamped in a gulch east of Marvin. They managed by great exertions to save their own lives and one of their children. But one of the dead bodies was found.

The last Indian "scare" was in 1878. The news came to Kirwin and Phillips County that the hostile Indians were raiding in Decatur and Rawlins counties on the west, and that the people of Phillips should prepare to meet the shock. Messengers arrived in hot haste with the news that large bands of the cruel and bloody Cheyennes were approaching the eastern sections, killing the settlers, driving off their stock and burning houses. Hundreds of settlers from the west flocked into Kirwin and other parts of Phillips County, and it was determined to meet the hostiles. But, fortunately, government troops arrived and the Cheyennes were driven back before reaching Kirwin. That is the last of the threatened Indian raids, as they are now on their reservations, and there is no longer danger in that quarter.

MURDER OF GEORGE T. LORD.

In December, 1882, Mrs. Millie McHurin, formerly Mrs. Cisley, of Kirwin, was arrested in Graham County charged with the murder of George T. Lord, also of that city. The following are the attendant circumstances, as given in the Kirwin Independent:

"About the middle of May, 1880, George T. Lord, a well-known citizen of Kirwin, left this place with a well equipped outfit and a considerable sum of money, with the avowed purpose of going to the mountains, to be gone an indefinite length of time. His neighbors were given to understand that unless he prospered in his enterprise they would not hear from him. From Kirwin Mr. Lord drove up Bow Creek and over to Stockton. Here he sold his load of bacon and came back to Bow Creek Crossing, where his team ran away, breaking the tongue of the wagon and slightly injuring himself. The team was caught, and with the assistance of Joshua Kincaid the breaks were repairad. A Mrs. Cisley, who is well known in this community, and who had been a housekeeper for the Lord family for a long time previous to the departure of Mr. Lord, joined him at this point, she being accompanied by a child four years old. As soon as the wagon was fixed the party traveled to the southwest. They reached Monument Station on the evening of May 28th, and after watering at the railroad tank they went down the ravine to the southeast about three miles, where they went into camp for the night. And this is the last time Uncle George Lord, as he was familiarly called, was ever seen alive. The next morning a cattle herder looking for stray stock, seeing their camp went toward it to inquire about his lost cattle. Mrs. Cisley seeing him coming, left the wagon and went toward him meeting him about forty rods from the wagon. When asked if she had seen any cattle near there she said that there had been no cattle near there, but that she had seen some in another direction, with which information the herder went away in the direction indicated. Mrs. Cisley and her child reached Collyer May 29th, having driven about sixty-five miles, and driving about sixty miles on Saturday, May 30th, she reached Hayes City about dark. At Hayes she sold the team, harness and wagon, worth at least $350, to Mr. Madden, a liveryman, for $102. She stated while at Hayes that her husband had died out West. In a few days after making the sale she returned to Phillips County.

"About the middle of June, 1880, the dead body of a man, who had been shot in the back of the head, was found in the ravine three miles southeast of Monument, where George T. Lord, Mrs. Cisley and her child had camped. The body was much decomposed, and had evidently lain there several weeks. Near by was found some clothing, boots, feather bed, etc The station agent at Monument took charge of the clothing, which has been preserved, and another resident took the feather bed. Notice was sent to the coroner of Ellis County, in which jurisdiction the body was found, but the distance was so great, and the body had lain so long that no inquest was held and it was buried near where it lay.

"Some time since Mr. and Mrs. John Abrams received information from Mrs. Warren, formerly of this place, and then living at Atwood, Rawlins County, that the station agent at Monument had some clothing that had been found near the body of a murdered man, and gave such a description of them as left little doubt that the dead man was none other than George T. Lord. Mr. Abrams, John B. Lord and G. M. Davis started for Monument some three weeks ago, where they identified the clothing, and gathered facts concerning the matter. They then took the trail of the woman with the wagon and team, to Hayes, gathering a train of circumstances that proved the terrible truth, that George T. Lord was murdered for his money and property. At Hayes they found one of the horses and a gold ring that the woman had sold. Fully satisfied that Mrs. Cisley was guilty, they filed a complaint, charging the crime against her, and returned to Kirwin.

"According to a prearranged plan, John Abrams, John B. Lord, (son of deceased) A. G. McBride, county attorney, James Scott, Sr., and G. M. Davis, all of this place, met Sheriff Allen, of Trego County, at Logan yesterday morning and they all proceeded to the place where Mrs. Cisley, (now Mrs. McHurin) lives. Starting early in the morning they reached the place about noon. Mrs. McHurin was taken by surprise, though when told that she must consider herself under arrest she made an effort as though to get a revolver from a bureau drawer, but was defeated and secured. Search of the premises was made and many things that had formerly belonged to the deceased were found and identified. The silver watch, the mittens and an otter skin muffler were among the things found.

"Mrs. Cisley (now Mrs McHurin) was taken to Logan, whence she was taken to Lenora on the night train. From Lenora she was taken to Wakeeney, where she will be held to answer for the crime of which it now seems certain she is guilty. The parties who made the arrest are reticent about giving details as to her actions after arrest, but it has leaked out that she broke down entirely and made a full confession of her guilt. From the reports we learn that Mr. Lord had with him at the time he was murdered about $1,000 in cash, and other property worth some five hundred dollars, all of which was taken by the woman. That he was shot in the back of the head while sleeping in the wagon, the bullet fracturing the skull in front but not coming through, and causing instant death, is certain. The case against Mrs. Cisley is wholly upon her confession, (if she has made one) and upon purely circumstantial evidence, but so strong are the circumstances, so plainly marked is the trail she has left that there can be no doubt that this woman, Cisley, is the cold-blooded murderess of George T. Lord. No man had more friends than the deceased. Bluff, honest, generous, he was, notwithstanding his rough manner, respected by all who knew him. He had faults—but who has not? And now the mystery of his long-continued silence is solved. It was the silence of the grave."

LOGAN.

This young city, named in honor of the distinguished Illinois senator, is handsomely located on the north bank of the Solomon river, three miles west, seven miles from the south line of the county and twenty-four miles west of Kirwin, and commands a fine view of the broad, fertile valleys of the Solomon river, Crooked and Cactus creeks, both of which empty into the river within a mile of the town. Logan was located in 1873, but made but little progress until 1878, when several men of enterprise located there. Their energy and vigor have produced fruits, and a rapid growth followed. Logan is now recognized as one of the live towns of the northwest. In June, 1880, new life was infused into the town by the completion of the Central Branch road to the town, and it practically remained the terminus of the road until January, 1882. It is the boast of the business men of the place that no town in the northwest has better or fuller stocks of general merchandise, agricultural implements and groceries. As a class the people are generous, enterprising and intelligent. Logan contains five general merchandise stores, two hardware, one bank, two hotels, a drug store, millinery store, furniture store, bakery, barber shop, wagon shop, billiard hall, two blacksmith shops, a photograph gallery, two grain buyers, two groceries, two lawyers, three physicians, two resident clergymen, and one of the best managed newspapers in the Solomon Valley. The extensive flouring mills (Peter Hanson's) is one of the most complete and commodious in Northwestern Kansas. In addition two sorghum mills are about going into successful operation. In one of them about $3,000 capital has been invested. With a large extent of fertile country tributary to the young city Logan is fast growing into importance, and increasing her trade.

Logan was first settled in 1870, B. F. Darling being the earliest settler. He was soon followed by W. R. Shleppy, Peter Hanson, D. G. Hoover, the Marvins, Peter Hanson, A. C. Larick, James Boyd, M. Scranton, Jacob Post, F. and U. Allbright and others. The town was named by D. G. Hoover in honor of his old commander, General John A. Logan, of Illinois. The first birth in the town was John Logan Graft, born in the spring of 1872. In September, 1872, occurred the first marriage in the village, Frank Gray and Miss Jennie Shleppy. The first death was that of George Knox, in July, 1872. He was shot accidently.

Logan was organized as a town in 1872, the first officers being A. B. Miller, trustee; and John Sears, town clerk. The town or village government continued until 1880, when Logan followed the example of Kirwin and Phillipsburg and became a city.

The first mayor chosen was Charles H. Bridges, who also serves the city in the same capacity at the present time. W. W. Gray was the first elected clerk and continues to hold the office by re-election. The first councilmen were: T. M. Bishop, Dr. Thomas, F. R. Hamilton, W. A. Johnson and Charles Smith. The present board consists of W. A. Reeder, T. Wiltrout, H. N. Boyd, J. Shultz and Dr. C. T. Lawrence. Monthly meetings are held.

The first school was taught in a log house on Washington street, during the fall and winter of 1872, by Rufus Hastings. Six years later a substantial public school building was erected on Washington street at a cost of $700. Logan has always had first-class school privileges, and has always paid her teachers above average rates.

The first sermon was preached in 1872, in the school house by Rev. Henry Worley, of the M. E. Church. The Free Methodists are now erecting a substantial and roomy stone church in the city, and the Methodist Episcopals, through the effective labors of Rev. Mr. Dalton have secured a subscription of $1,200, and will build a meeting house during the year 1882.

The first postoffice was established in 1870 (named Logan) and B. F. Darling was first postmaster. The office was kept in a two-room dug-out on the north bank of the Solomon, near where Hanson's flour mill now stands. Succeeding B. F. Darling as postmaster were W. H. Gray, H. P. Gandy, Thomas Beaumont, Mrs. Mary B. Benjamin. This lady has charge of the office at the present time. The money order department was introduced in the Logan office July 1, 1879. The first saw mill was erected by McClallen & Hanson in 1874; but one year later they believed that a grist mill would prove more profitable. The sawing machinery was removed and flouring mill works put in place. It is a four-run mill, one of the best in the Solomon Valley, capable of grinding 200 bushels of wheat per day. Under and below the mill they made a tunnel through the solid rock, at a cost of nearly $1,000. The first store in Logan was started by Gray Bros., 1872, on Washington street. Gray Brothers erected two log houses early in 1872, and in one of these they opened the first stock of goods in the new town. Two years later Dr. Leighty built a neat little frame store house, which was the wonder and admiration of the early settlers.

During the present season a stock company was organized for the erection of a sorghum mill. The amount of $2,000 has been paid in and the experiment bids fair to become a success. Peter Hanson, the miller, is the leading spirit in the enterprise. In addition to this contemplated improvement, similar enterprises of smaller dimensions is already in successful operation.

The ground on which Logan stands is gently rolling, and the location for a large town is beautiful. The land was homesteaded in 1870 by B. F. Darling. He made a comfortable dug-out on the high bank overlooking the Solomon, and continued to reside there until 1880 when he removed to Florida. Mr. Darling sold 40 acres of his homestead to J. J. Wiltrout, 40 acres to W. R. Shleppy and the remaining 80 acres to J. Blakeley. The population of Logan at the present time is between four and five hundred. There are two resident clergymen in Logan, Rev. H. Dalton, of the M. E. Church, and Rev. J. J. Wayt, Free Methodist.

SHERIDAN COUNTY.

SHERIDAN County was created by an act of the Legislature of 1873, and is the westernmost of the organized counties in the second northern tier. Its area is 900 square miles. It was named after General Philip H. Sheridan and first settled upon in 1874, by a buffalo hunter, who located upon Section 30, Township 6, Range 28.

The county is well watered. Both the South and North Forks of the Solomon River flow through the county, and the Saline River rises here. The creeks are small, but numerous and permeating the county in all directions. There is said to be good water power on the North Fork of the Solomon; springs are abundant, good well water can be had at a depth of about thirty feet. The streams are skirted with timber, though it is in rather narrow belts of the varieties common to Western Kansas.

There is about 97 per cent. of the land upland prairie; 3 per cent. bottom; the average width of the bottoms is one mile. The prairies are gently undulating, and in the western part of the county quite level.

The soil is generally of a deep rich black loam. Building stone is abundant, mostly of the white magnesian limestone.

The lands in this county are mostly subject to entry at the Oberlin Land Office, in the Northern District, though those on the southern side of the county are entered at Wakeeney, in Trego County. In the early spring of 1878, Captain G. C. West located 32 quarter sections of school lands here.

The county was organized June 2, 1880; the special County Clerk was W. M. Rodgers; special County Commissioners, K. A. Ellithorpe, W. S. Hausufus and W. A. Rodgers; temporary county seat, Kenneth.

HON. E. J. TURNER, lawyer and real estate dealer, was born at Lockport, Erie County, Pa., Dec. 26, 1846. When he was only one year of age, his father, J. L. Turner, a Methodist clergyman, removed with his family to Ohio, remaining there until 1849, when he pushed further west into Indiana, remaining there until 1853, then removed to Niles Mich., where he lived until 1856, when he located at Henry, Ill., and from thence to Bloomfield, Iowa, in 1860. E. J. Turner was for three years a student at the Adrian College of Michigan. In 1870 he entered the law office of Gen. Weaver, the recent Greenback candidate for President, remaining with him for two years; then located at Mount Ayer, Iowa, where he practiced law and conducted the Ringgold Record for two years; afterward embarking in the mercantile business at Ottumwa and Corning, Iowa, remaining in the business until his removal to Sheridan County, Kan., in February, 1879. He purchased a section of land and laid out the town of Kenneth, and engaged in the practice of law, selling town lots and dealing in other real estate, continuing in the business to the present time, besides being largely interested in wool growing, having an extensive sheep ranch extending for a distance of three miles, on the south bank of the Solomon River, beginning a distance of about six miles from Kenneth. He considers Sheridan County as one of the best cattle and sheep territories in Kansas. When he located it the county only twenty claims had been taken. Before the 20th of June of the same year there was not a section of land within the borders of the county upon which claims had not been made. He has served two terms in the Kansas Legislature, being elected a member of the House of Representatives in 1880 and 1882. He was in the army from November, 1863, until July, 1865. He enlisted in Company E, Thirteenth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, but was soon afterward detailed to duty in the Provost Marshal's office, doing duty most of the time at Louisville, Ky., and Nashville, Tenn. He is a member of the A., F. & A. M. Nov. 23, 1873, Mr. Turner was married at Afton, Iowa, to Ella Beymer, a native of Clyde, Ohio; she died Jan. 26, 1882, leaving one child—Kenneth Beymer Turner—who was born at Corning, Iowa, Dec. 8, 1874.

BARBER COUNTY.

BARBER County takes its name from Thomas W. Barber, a Free-State settler in Douglas County, who was killed near Lawrence on December 6, 1855. It was intended when the county was christened that it should bear the name of Barber, but somebody, out of an exceedingly wise head, determined that the spelling should be Barbour, and it stood in this form until 1883, when the Legislature enacted that henceforward the county should bear the name originally given it.

The county is nearly in the form of a rectangle, Kingman cutting out a block six miles square from the northeast corner. It is thirty-three miles in depth and thirty-six miles from east to west, giving a total area of 1,184 square miles.

The county has ten per cent of bottom and ninety per cent of upland. Timber occupies but one per cent of its surface, the remainder being prairie. The general surface of the eastern half of the county is very level, but the western half, which includes the famous Cedar Mountains, is largely broken and bluffy.

Cottonwood, red cedar, elm, hackberry, walnut and a few other varieties of timber are found in small quantities along the principal streams.

The principal streams are Medicine Lodge, Driftwood, Mulberry, Hackberry and Mule. The tributaries of the Medicine Lodge River are Bear, Cedar and Monument Creeks, flowing north, and Elm and Turkey flowing south. Big and Little Mule Creeks run southeast and empty into the Salt Fork of the Arkansas. In addition to these streams, are numerous springs all over the county, and water can be obtained by wells of from ten to fifty feet in depth.

Considerable quantities of red sandstone exist in the northwestern part of the county, near Sun City. Vast fields of gypsum underlie that part of the county southwest of the Medicine Lodge River, and fire-clay has been discovered near Sun City.

EARLY HISTORY.

The lands of the county are all embraced in the "thirty mile" and "three mile" strips, formerly owned by the Osages and the Cherokees respectively. These lands were ceded to the Government by the treaty of July 15, 1870, and were then offered for pre-emption but not for home-steading or timber claim entry. They embraced some of the best hunting grounds of the Osages, as the still plainly marked and numerous "buffalo wallows" testify.

The first settler in the county was a man named Griffin, who located on a ranch about one mile from where Sun City now stands, in the winter of 1871-72. This pioneer was killed in the Indian Territory the following summer, and C. H. Douglass is now the leading merchant in the town. In the spring of 1872, E. H. Mosley, Lockwood and Leonard located at Kiowa. Mosley had a small stock of goods which he traded to the Indians. He spent his time hunting buffalo and collecting the hides for market. Lockwood and Leonard attempted farming. July 30, 1872, the Indians, who were opposed to the whites settling in that section, made a raid on the residences of Leonard and Lockwood, and in the fight Mosley was killed, the others saving their lives by remaining in the house inside a stockade. The Indians killed nearly all the stock at this ranch and went off. Eli Smith located at the same place in October, 1872, and the first store was opened by G. Hegwer in the spring of 1878.

In December, 1872, Derrick Updegraff located at Medicine Lodge, and soon after Salmon P. Tuttle brought a drove of cattle to a camp near Updegraff's claim. William Walters, W. E. Hutchinson, with two brothers, Jake Ryan, A. L. Duncan, David Hubbard and John Beebee made settlement at or near Medicine Lodge early in 1878, and Samuel Larsh and a Mr. Wyncoop started a ranch at the mouth of Cedar Creek, three miles northwest of the Updegraff claim. Lake city was established by Reuben Lake April 6, 1878. With the summer of 1878 came general immigration and quite rapid settlement all over the northern part of the county.

The first child born in the county was Ralph Duncan, son of A. L. Duncan, born in the spring of 1878. The first wedding in the county took place in July, 1874, and united Charles Tabor and Miss Moore. S. Miller and Mary Hale were married at Sun City at an early day, but the exact date is unknown.

The following account of the Indian raid of 1874 seems to be the most correct of the many conflicting ones that are given. It is vouched for by E. P. Caruthers, of the Index, who has been in a position to get the facts: It was in the summer of 1874 that the so-called Indian raid occurred—when a band of Indians, led by a number of white men, it is alleged, came to this county and murdered several citizens up the Medicine River. There are different versions of the story. One is that the invaders were Indians who were opposed to the whites settling up the country and destroying their hunting grounds. Another version is that they were white men, in Indian disguise, who were hired by interested parties to drive out the population, that the rascality of the bond swindlers might not be detected or interrupted. Old citizens don't like to say much about that raid, preferring to let the dead past bury its dead—the dead Indians being already buried. The invaders were satisfied with one invasion.

To protect the citizens, stockades were built at this place, up the river twelve miles and at Sun City. The one here ran north and south through the alleys parallel with and next to Main street. Where the Cresset office stands was the northern line, and near Blickhahn's shop was the southern line. It was made of cedar posts set on end in the ground. As a further protection, a company of militia was organized at this place, and one at Sun City, and these were willing to keep off all savages for the pay they received from the State.

For the following account of the great interest of the county—stock-raising—we are indebted to E. P. Caruthers, of the Index:

"This county was a great grazing district for buffalo, and old settlers tell us that there were twenty times as many buffalo here as there are cattle now. One enthusiastic old settler remarked that he had seen them so thick on the Medicine River that one could walk for miles by only stepping from one buffalo to another. We suppress his name for the sake of his family. But they were thick and died in great numbers. Their bleached bones were as thick in the cañons and on the prairies as stumps are in a clearing. Who does not remember the 'Bone Age,' when the bone pilgrims swooped down on this country by the hundreds and hauled the bones away by the thousands of tons? There was no harm in this, but this same crowd was guilty of meanness, for they would burn off the grass on every occasion they had the opportunity, that the white bleached bones might be seen more easily. This was after the 'Cedar Age,' when these same pilgrims came here and stole all the cedar posts out of the country.

"Where the buffalo roamed must be a good place for cattle, thought the old settlers, and they were correct, as has since been demonstrated. The rich grass that remains nutritious the entire year, and the many streams of pure water made the county one to be sought after by stockmen. Many of the early settlers tried agriculture as a pursuit, and generally failed, though a few on the streams did occasionally raise something like crops; but these soon found it true that this was not an agricultural section, and abandoned their experiments.

"The first cattle held in the county was a bunch of through Texas cattle purchased by Solomon Tuttle in the fall of 1872, and wintered across the Medicine River, about where the saw mill now stands. These he drove North and sold the following summer.

"The first graded cattle were driven in from Missouri in the spring of 1873 by William Carl, who held them on the Medicine, twelve miles above this city. Judge Shepler drove a few head in at the same time, with Carl.

"From that time on, the stock business has grown rapidly. From every State, came in men to engage in the business. Texas cattle found a ready sale here, and in fact any animal that wore horns and hoofs. With that enterprise which is always to be found in stockmen, progress and improvement were the watch words. High grade bulls and heifers were brought here from Kentucky and elsewhere, and to-day the range is full of the best graded stock cattle to be found in the West. There are Texans still being driven here, but principally cows, and the stock shipped from here brings the best prices offered for domestic cattle. The range is now generally taken up and much of it fenced. It has on it about as many cattle as can do well, and with no more than is now here all owners must prosper. But should there once grow up a jealousy and greediness among the stockmen a large part of the business must be crippled."

The railway history of the county is embraced in one unhappy experience. On August 27, 1873, a special election was held to decide the question of subscribing $100,000 to the stock of the Nebraska, Kansas & Southwestern Railway, and issuing bonds to the county of a like amount. The measure was carried by a vote of ninety-one to thirty-six, and the county bonds issued. These are now a valid lien against the county, but the railway was never built, and the citizens, having no redress, are out $100,000.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION.

The first record of the County Commissioners bears the date of July 7, 1873—the board then consisting of S. H. Ulmer, L. H. Bowlus and J. C. Kirkpatrick. On September 1, 1873, a contract was made with C. C. Bemis for a court house to cost $25,000, and the Clerk directed to issue warrants for that amount. This court house was never built. September 2, W. E. Hutchinson was appointed immigration agent, and $1,000 in warrants drawn in his favor. October 6, G. W. Crane was appointed advertising agent, and it was directed that $5,000, "or as much of it as might be needed," be paid him. November 7, 1873, the county was divided into three County Commissioners' districts. On February 11, 1874, a special election on the question of issuing bonds to the amount of $40,000, for court house and general purposes took place, and resulted in the defeat of the proposition by a majority of 41. A little later, the Commissioners, acting under a law approved March 7, 1874, issued these bonds.

The first regular election took place in November, 1873. The vote of Medicine Lodge precinct was thrown out, and a count of the other ballots resulted in the choice of the following county officers: M. D. Houk, County Clerk; Jacob Horn, County Treasurer; D. E. Sheldon, Probate Judge; Reuben Lake, Sheriff; S. B. Douglas, Superintendent of Public Instruction; C. H. Douglass, Clerk of the District Court; M. S. Cobb, Register of Deeds; M. W. Sutton, County Attorney. The records of the general election of 1874 are missing. County Clerks have been elected as follows: S. J. Shepler, 1875–77; R. A. Ward, 1879; J. E. Chapin, 1881. County Treasurers: Jacob Horn, 1875; J. W. McNeal, 1877; J. E. Chapin, 1879; W. T. Rouse, 1881. Sheriffs: C. L. Walker, 1875; J. Moore, 1877; J. T. Taylor, 1879; C. T. Rigg, 1881. Probate Judges: W. M. Friedly, 1876–78; S. J. Shepler, 1880–82. County Superintendents of Public Instruction: C. C. Bond, 1875; M. L. Palmer, 1876; J. W. Cornelius, 1878; T. S. Lindley, 1880; A. Axline, 1882. Clerks of the District Court: W. G. Osborn, 1875; T. W. McClure, 1877; S. W. Lard, 1878; T. W. Osborne, 1879; Robert A. Talliaferro, 1880–82. Registers of Deeds: J. R. Easley, 1875; Edward Ozbun, 1877; J. R. Easley, 1878; W. A. Mount, 1879; L. W. Coroners: George Eberaal, 1875; J. V. Fishburn, 1877; William Eitch, 1879; J. W. Singer, 1881.

Barber County has passed through but one county seat contest, that of February 27, 1876. This could hardly be called a contest, as Medicine Lodge received more that the combined vote of its competitors. The vote stood 103 for Medicine Lodge, 58 for Defiance and 20 for Lake City. This vote settled the question, and the hopelessness of any attempt to remove the seat of justice has kept the matter quiet ever since.

STATISTICS.

The first obtainable report from this county to the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, bears date 1878. The county then had eight schoolhouses, six log and two frame. There were twenty school districts, and a school population of 360. The number of schoolhouses in the county in 1880 is reported at four (evidently a mistake). There were in that year twenty-five school districts, and a school population of 869. In 1882, several districts failed to report, and some inaccuracies resulted. That year showed fourteen schoolhouses, 861 school population, an enrollment of 400, and an average attendance of 325. The total expenses of the year were $2,639.83; the total receipts, $3,122.69.

Barber is essentially a grazing country, but a considerable amount of cereals are raised in it. No report of crop acreage was made to the State Board of Agriculture prior to 1875, with which year the following table begins:

	1875.	1878.	1880.	1882.
Winter Wheat	45	1,286	1,002	191

The population of the county was in 1875, 366; in 1878, 1,388; in 1880, 2,025; in 1882 2,199.

MEDICINE LODGE.

Medicine Lodge takes its name from the river which skirts the town site on the west. This stream in turn was named by the Indians, who often met upon its banks in council for "making medicine." The location of the city is an admirable one, Elm Creek lying on the east, and Medicine River on the west, joining their waters a quarter of a mile to the south of the city, while between them rises the lofty plateau of the town site.

In October, 1872, William Walters had a temporary camp at the forks below the present city, but made no effort at settlement, and moved away the following spring. In February, 1873, the party, led by John Hutchinson, came to Medicine Lodge, and laid out the town site of 400 acres. The first building on the town site was the structure which now forms the dining room of the Medicine Lodge house. It was put up by D. Updegraff, and used then as now, for hotel purposes. Lumber was hauled from Hutchinson, and Bemis, Hutchinson & Co. proceeded to put up an office—the building which now forms the south wing of the Medicine Lodge House. This was followed by a large general store, erected by Bemis, Jordon & Co., on the spot now occupied by Payne's bank. L. H. Ulmer was the next merchant to locate here, and was followed in the summer of 1873 by D. E. Sheldon. Immigration was rapid during 1873, that year witnessing the arrival of C. T. Rigg, the first physician in the town, and now Sheriff of the county; of W. E. Hutchinson, the first attorney, and of M. Sutton, also a disciple of Blackstone. The first blacksmith shop was put up by Cicero Widner, and the first drug store opened by S. A. Winston during this season. The Indian scare of 1874 checked settlement, and caused a large exodus, but the following years showed a steady growth, that has made Medicine Lodge an "eminently solid" city.

A post office was established at Medicine Lodge in 1873, and the mail handled by W. E. Hutchinson. S. A. Winston was Postmaster in 1878, and was followed by M. D. Houck, D. E. Van Slyke, Eli Smith and W. D. Van Slyke, the present official. The first post office was in the Winston building, now owned by Dr. C. T. Rigg, and leased as a billiard room. It was in this room that the first term of court was held. Thence it was moved to the lot now occupied by the Medicine Valley Bank, thence to the Friedly building, the little frame north of Little's store, and its present quarters on the west side of Main street. It was made a money order office in 1879, and the first order purchased by Charles Ellis, July 8, of that year. It became an office of the third class April 1, 1883. Mail routes from this point run to Harper, Kiowa, Kinsley, Great Bend and Hutchinson. The Kinsley route passes through Sun City and Lake City; the Hutchinson through Kingman, Kingman County, and the Great Bend through Iuka, in Pratt County.

CITY GOVERNMENT SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.

On May 21, 1879, the order incorporating Medicine Lodge as a city of the third class was signed, and the first city election was set for June 7, 1879. This election resulted in the choice of W. W. Cook, Mayor; H. M. Davis, Police Judge; W. W. Standiford, J. N. Iliff, George Mitts, J. Storey and D. M. Carmichael, Councilmen. S. J. Shepler served a short time as City Clerk, and was followed by J. W. Upperman. A. W. Little was Mayor in 1880, J. E. Chapin in 1881, and S. J. Shepler in 1882. Police Judges were elected as follows: H. M. Davis, 1880–81; G. S. Turney, 1882; S. J. Shepler was City Clerk in 1880, A. V. Shepler in 1881, and J. W. Upperman in 1882. The present Council is made up of W. W. Cook, D. Van Slyke, E. Youmans, E. W. Payne, T. A. McNeal. C. T. Rigg is Marshal, E. Sample, City Attorney, and J. C. Orner, City Treasurer. The city now has a population of nearly 600.

School District No. 1, which takes in Medicine Lodge, was organized in the spring of 1873, and Miss Lucinda Burlingame engaged as teacher. She was followed by Mr. J. Whitelaw, Mrs. Julia A. Whitelaw, H. M. Davis, John Swank, Mrs. M. G. McClure, J. M. Neal, E. M. Byerley and A. Axline, the present Principal, who was engaged in the fall of 1880, and still holds the position. Mr. Axline is assisted by Mrs. Julia A. Whitelaw and Mrs. M. G. McClure. The original schoolhouse built in 1873, at a cost of $400 ($1,500 in bonds were issued for this purpose), was in use until the fall of 1882. A new brick school will be completed in 1883, at a cost of $6,000. It will be 43x43 feet, and contain four rooms. The funds for this building were raised by the sale of bonds to the amount of $4,400, and taxation to the amount of $1,600. The school has now an enrollment of 227.

The earliest religious services in the town were held by traveling Methodist preachers. No regular organization, was, however, effected until 1878, when Rev. Mr. Mattern was appointed pastor. The society then numbered thirteen, but felt so much confidence in the future, that the erection of a church building was at once decided upon. This structure was completed in 1879, at a cost of $1,200. A parsonage was erected in 1881, at a cost of $300. Rev. Mr. Music was appointed pastor in 1880, but remained only a short time, and his unexpired term was filled by Rev. Mr. Rolinson. W. C. Reed was pastor in 1881, and James F. Hill in 1882. The society now numbers forty-seven. The Union Sabbath school is conducted by this church and the Presbyterians. It is in a flourishing condition under J. T. Taylor.

The Christian Church was organized in October, 1878, and A. H. Mulky chosen pastor. His labors closed in 1882, and since that time there has been no regular preaching. The society, which, at the time of organization, numbered thirteen, now has forty-five members enrolled. Early services were held in the schoolhouse, whence they were moved to the residence of D. E. Sheldon, which had been converted to school purposes. A church building was completed in 1880, at a cost of $1,400, and has been occupied for the past two years. A Sabbath school organized in 1880 has an average attendance of forty, and is in charge of T. A. McLeary.

There is a society of this denomination, at Sharon Post Office, ten miles east of Medicine Lodge. It is supplied by Rev. Charles Collins, and has a membership of forty, and a flourishing Sabbath school under James Huffaker.

Presbyterian Church.—As early as 1879, services were held at this point by Rev. A. Axline, but it was not until his settlement here in 1880 that a society was formed. The society has never had a change of pastors, and retains its original membership of twenty-two. Services have been held in the schoolhouse, and later in the Methodist Episcopal Church. A Presbyterian Church edifice is now building, and will be completed in 1883. It will be 35x50 feet, seat 300, and cost, with the lot occupied, $3,000. The church has no separate Sabbath school.

The United Brethren have a number of members in the county, but very few in Medicine Lodge. Rev. W. M. Friedly performed all services up to November 7, 1882, when he left for Winfield, Cowley County, and his place was filled by Rev. D. J. Cole.

SOCIETIES, THE PRESS, ETC.

Pioneer Lodge, No. 179, I. O. O. F., was organized on February 24, 1881, with seven members and the following officers: John Nelson, N. G.; John Higgins, V. G.; E. M. Byerley, S.; D. Morris, Treasurer. The lodge now numbers forty-one members, and has the following official roll: John Higgins, N. G.; E. M. Byerley, V. G.; W. T. Rouse, Secretary; Ambrose Allen, Treasurer. Meetings are held in Odd Fellows' Hall, on Tuesday of each week. The property of the lodge consists of $110 in cash, and furniture and regalia to the value of $200.

Delta Lodge, No. 77, A., F. & A. M., was organized under dispensation, in March, 1881, and chartered in March, 1882. At the time the charter was granted, the lodge had twenty-two members, and the following officers: S. J. Shepler, W. M.; C. G. Turney, S. W.; I. W. Stout, J. W.; J. E. Chapin, Secretary; Burd Lacey, Treasurer. From March, 1882, to the December election of that year, D. Van Slyke filled the office of Treasurer. The present officers of the lodge are S. J. Shepler, W. M.; C. G. Turney, S. W.; George Geppert, J. W.; H. Yant, Secretary; Burd Lacey, Treasurer. The lodge now has a membership of forty-seven. Meetings are held on the first and third Saturdays of each month in Masonic Hall.

Fidelity Lodge, No. 80, A. O. U. W., was chartered October 14, 1881. It had then seventeen members and the following officers: J. E. Chapin, P. M. W.; John L. Nelson, M. W.; E. Morris, Foreman; J. W. Singer, O.; J. C. Orner, Recorder; W. T. Rouse, Fin.; Eli Smith, Receiver. The lodge now has a membership of twenty-four, and the following official roll: J. W. Singer, P. M. W.; S. M. Roberts, M. W.; R. G. Eckert, Foreman; N. W. Young, O.; L. W. Moore, Recorder; L. D. Hess, Fin.; Eli Smith, Receiver. Meetings are held in Masonic Hall on the second and fourth Mondays of each month.

The press history of this town, as well as of the county, is comprised in that of three papers, the Mail, Cresset and Index.

The Barbour County Mail was started May 20, 1878, by M. J. Cochran. Its first appearance was as an eight-column folio, one side "patent," but it soon changed to a six-column folio, "all home print." It was sold March 10, 1879, to J. W. McNeal and E. W. Iliff, who at once started the Cresset. The Cresset (from cresset, a brilliant light) made its first appearance on March 20, 1879, as a six-column folio. May 20, 1879, Iliff sold out to T. A. McNeal, and July 10, the form was changed to a five-column "patent" quarto. This was changed to a six-column June 25, 1880, and to a seven-column in April, 1883. April 8, 1882, J. W. McNeal sold out to T. A. McNeal, who the same day formed a partnership with L. M. Axline. The paper now has a circulation of 768; appears Thursdays, and is, as it has always been, Republican in politics.

The Barbour County Index appeared June 16, 1880, as a seven-column folio, edited and owned by M. L. Sherpey. The office consisted of a small amount of type owned by the Cresset, and possessed neither press, imposing stone nor ink table. Notwithstanding these obstacles, the paper lived and grew, becoming an eight-column folio in November, 1881, and a six-column quarto in March, 1882. In July, 1882, it was purchased by E. W. Payne, who changed it to a seven-column quarto in February, 1883. It now has a circulation of 720, is issued on Thursdays, and is a shining light in the Democratic press of this region.

The Merchants' & Drovers' Bank was the first bank in the city, and was started in October, 1880, by H. M. Hickman. Business was transacted until January 10, 1882, when unfortunate outside business caused the closing of the bank.

Medicine Valley Bank.—Two days after the closing of the Merchants' & Drovers', this bank sprang into existence. It is run by a joint stock company, officered by E. W. Payne, President; George Geppert, Cashier; W. W. Cook, Vice President. The capital stock of the bank was $50,000, up to November, 1882, when it was increased to $100,000. A fine bank building was completed in March, 1883, at a cost, all told, of $7,500.

Standiford, Youmans & Co.—This bank is a private one, and makes no statement of resources. It was organized in 1881, and has done a good business since that time.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

F. T. BEACH, of the firm of Bender & Beach, dealers in hardware, lumber, etc., was born in Litchfield County, State of Connecticut, in 1835. His parents moved to Rock County, Wis., in 1846. Was one of the first settlers of that region. Was reared in the agricultural business and obtained a business education. When twenty-one years of age, he began farming for himself in Wisconsin, where he remained for seven years. He then moved to Evansville, in the same county, and engaged in the livery business, remaining two and one-half years; then farmed two years. In 1869, he emigrated to Kansas, and settled in Linn County, where he was in the real estate business, laying out and platting what is known as Foot & Beach's First Addition to the City of La Cygne, remaining in this business for six years. NESS COUNTY.

NESS County was created and named by an act of the Legislature of 1867. Its area then was 900 square miles. In 1873, the boundaries of the county were enlarged so as to include an area of 1,080 square miles. The county was named after Noah V. Ness, Corporal of Company G, Seventh Kansas Cavalry, who died of wounds received in battle at Abbeyville, Miss., August 11, 1864.

Ness County did not settle very rapidly at first, but its few early residents were ambitious and enterprising, and very anxious to secure a county organization. In 1873, on the claim that the county had, by the Assessor's returns, 600 inhabitants, a petition for an organization was sent to the Governor. The county was organized October 23, 1873, O. H. Perry, Thomas Myers and John Rogers being appointed Special County Commissioners, and Charles McGuire Special County Clerk.

At the State election held November 4, 1873, S. G. Rodgers was elected a member of the Kansas House of Representatives, having received 263 votes, as appears from the vote returned to the office of Secretary of State Smallwood. Ness County was represented in the Legislature from January 13 to February 18, 1874. On the 3d of February, 1874, Hon. H. J. McGaffigan, the Representative from Ellis County, offered the following resolution, which was adopted, and the papers in the case were referred to the House Committee on Elections, of which Hon. C. B. Mason, of Franklin, was Chairman:

Resolved, That a special committee of three be appointed to inquire into the organization of Ness County, and that said committee be authorized to administer oaths, send for persons and papers, and to visit Ness County if deemed necessary, for the prosecution of this inquiry.

The Committee reported August 17, that, in their opinion, as there were not 250 legal voters in the county at the time of the last general election, S. G. Rodgers was not entitled to a seat in the Legislature.

Smallwood City was then the temporary county seat of Ness County. One John E. Farnsworth made affidavit, January 7, 1874, that, on November 4, 1873, the poll-books at Smallwood City showed that forty-eight votes had been cast there on the day of election; that he thought there were but fourteen legal voters in Ness County who had resided in the county thirty days or more; that he took a census of all the inhabitants on December 22 and 23, 1874, and found the number of men, women and children not over 140. Mr. Farnsworth took the census of the county in January, 1874, and ascertained that the total population reached but seventy-nine. Thereupon twenty of the citizens of the county petitioned Gov. Osborn, for reasons coming within the range of law, to disorganize the county. The petition was at once complied with.

In 1878, in the time intervening between January, 1874, the date of the disorganization of the county, and its re-organization April 14, 1880, Alfred Pag[illegible] was appointed by Gov. George T. Anthony, Notary Public of the county, his commission bearing date June 28, of that year.

The first death of an adult occurring in Ness County is said to have been that of Mrs. Luella Manderville, wife of J. H. Manderville, who died November 9, 1879. She was the daughter of N. A. Peckham, one of the oldest settlers of the county, and was the first white woman who had settled west of the forks of the Walnut.

Though numbering the seventy-ninth in the order of the eighty-one organized counties of Kansas, yet there are only sixty-nine counties that have a larger number of organized school districts.

J. W. Miller, who was the Deputy County Superintendent of Public Instruction while Ness County was unorganized, organized twenty-two school districts during the year 1879.

Henry J. Bell, B. H. Crosthwait, Philip E. Dimick, Lucy A. Forbes, Tennie M. Forbes, Emma A. Kellogg, George S. Redd and John F. West were among the early teachers of the county.

Five organizations of the Methodist Episcopalians are now reported from Ness County, with a membership of sixty; three of the Church of Disciples, membership 450; Roman Catholic, one, membership fifty; Presbyterian one, membership fifteen. As yet there are but few church edifices.

Ness City, the county seat, was surveyed October 22, 1878, by Richard Dighton. It is situated on Walnut Creek, a short distance south of the geographical center of the county. An important addition was made to the town by John Stephens, in 1880. It now contains one general store, a post office, hotel, land office, wagon shop, blacksmith and other shops, and is a busy town.

Clarinda was located on the northeast quarter of Section 24, Town 19, Range 24. It was surveyed March 25, 1879, by Thomas R. Peck, Surveyor of Trego County.

Sidney was laid out north of the junction of the South Fork with the main Walnut, June 6, 1879. The Sidney Town Company was organized in July, 1879; E. M. Bill was President; R. B. Linville, Vice President; H. S. Bell, Secretary; A. F. Gardner, Treasurer.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION.

November 3, 1879, Ness City petitioned for a county organization, with that place as temporary county seat, and about the 20th of the same month there was filed in the office of Gov. John R. St. John a memorial asking for the organization of the county, the appointment of N. C. Merrill to take the census, and the designation of Ness City as temporary county seat.

At Sidney, also, a committee was organized November 20, 1879, for the purpose of organizing the county, of which J. P. Johnson was Chairman, and Levi Hilligoss, R. J. McFarland and Samuel A. Farnsworth, in the east part of the county; Frederic B. Caldwell in the central, and L. Weston in the western part. A. H. Kelson was recommended as County Clerk.

On the 14th of April, 1880, Gov. St. John, after receiving a petition signed by two hundred and fifty citizens of the county, issued a proclamation, re-organizing the county, appointed and commissioned John F. Farnsworth, L. Weston, and L. E. Knowles, County Commissioners, and James H. Elting, County Clerk, and designated Sidney as the temporary county seat.

The Commissioners and Clerk met at Sidney, April 22, 1880, and proceeded to qualify, the Commissioners organizing by making choice of L. Weston as Chairman of the Board. The board divided the county into Commissioner Districts, and into nine municipal townships of equal areas, each containing 120 square miles, being ten miles from north to south, and twelve miles from east to west.

The Commissioners selected June 1, 1880, as the day for holding an election to locate the county seat and elect the necessary county officers.

The assessed valuation of the taxable property of the county in 1881, was $126,156.27; in 1882 it was $204,567.86. The total levy for State taxes from the county for 1882, was $920.69. November 1, 1880, Noah Chenoweth paid the first tax in Ness County, and received the first tax receipt from Treasurer McFarland. It amounted to $54.40.

In the returns for winter wheat for 1882, Ness County reported good yields, as follows: M. C. Kitrie, Vansburgh, 100 acres, 25 bushels per acre; J. W. Clawson, Schoharie, 8 acres, 27 bushels per acre; J. Ness, Newby, 10 acres, 30 bushels per acre.

KINGMAN COUNTY.

LOCATION, TOPOGRAPHY, ETC.

KINGMAN County is twenty-four miles north and south, by thirty-six east and west. It contains twenty-four Congressional townships, and has a total of 552,960 acres or 864 square miles. Excepting 30,720 acres of school land, the residue is embraced in what is known as the Osage Reservation or trust lands. Of the 522,240 acres of land in the county, subject to pre-emption, 312,560 acres have been either deeded or filed upon, leaving 209,680 acres, exclusive of school lands, still vacant and subject to entry.

A line drawn through the center of the State from north to south, would pass through Kingman County, about six miles from its west line, so that the county may be said to be in the eastern half of the State. The south line of the county rests upon the sixth standard parallel, Kingman being in the second tier of counties north of the south line of the State.

For municipal purposes, the county is divided into twelve civil townships, and three commissioner districts. The county is bounded on the north by Reno County, on the south by Harper and a small portion of Barber, on the east by portions of Sedgwick and Sumner, and on the west by Pratt and the northern portion of Barber. The county is located about midway between the east and west boundary lines of the State.

The surface of the county is mostly high rolling prairie, but in the vicinity of the Ninnescah it is somewhat broken, but not to such an extent as to be termed bluffy. Leaving the valley of the stream, the ascent of the surface is considerable, but once the top is reached it stretches away in undulating prairie, with now and then a sand hill, or knoll, showing itself in the distance. Along the streams are strips of beautiful valley, or bottom land, but not a solitary tree can be seen to mark their course. The Ninnescah valley will average about a mile in width throughout the county, and although totally void of timber, is quite picturesque. Along the other streams in the county, the valleys are not continuous, but at invervals, very fine tracts of bottom land are to be found.

The county is very well watered, the Ninnescah being the most important stream, the Chikaskia being next. The Ninnescah is a very beautiful stream, and being fed altogether from springs, its water is pure and clear. It is about 100 miles in length, and flows through the entire length of Kingman County from west to east, receiving on its way the waters of Smoot Creek, a very fine little stream that rises at the center of the north line of the county, and runs in a southerly direction until it enters the Ninnescah at the east line of the county. Sand Creek or Big Sandy, is a small stream in the southwestern portion of the county, about twelve miles long, that empties into the Chikaskia, the latter being quite an important stream that flows eastward along the southern boundary line of the county. Besides these are several lesser streams that do not appear upon any of the maps. The Ninnescah is always a living stream, and although very shallow, preserves through all seasons of the year, either wet or dry, about a uniform flow of water, seldom or never overflowing its banks, and never falling below a certain volume. Good well water is found in all portions of the county, but in the uplands it is only obtainable by sinking wells from fifty to eighty feet in depth, but when found it is pure and clear and never failing in supply.

The soil of Kingman County is a mulatto colored loam and quite porous. It is considerably mixed with sand, and is easy of cultivation. It is sub-soiled in most places by a kind of red sandstone, which is excellent for building purposes, and which in some places, especially in the vicinity of the Ninnescah, crops out from the surface. The soil, particularly along the streams, is very productive, and even the upland has proved to be excellently adapted to agricultural pursuits, although not so reliable as the land in the valleys. Excellent crops, however, have been raised on some of the upland farms, and with a moderate rainfall good crops are assured. Small grain of all kinds can almost invariably be successfully raised, but corn is not so certain; but in seasons when rain falls at the proper time, large crops of corn are produced. Although a very good agricultural county it has certain advantages which place it in the front rank for stock-raising. It has an abundance of excellent water, and its wide stretches of buffalo grass afford good pasture. Cattle, however, are not confined to buffalo grass alone, as "blue stem" has supplanted it to a considerable extent. There are also many fine stretches of meadow land in the county, from which a plentiful supply of good hay can be cut for winter use. This dual character which pertains to the soil makes Kingman a very desirable county for that class of men who wish to engage in both farming and stock-raising.

EARLY HISTORY.

The first actual settler in Kingman County was Martin Updegraff, who located on the Chikaskia, about twenty miles southeast of the present town of Kingman, on Section 36, Town 29, Range 10, west of the sixth principal meridian. Mr. Updegraff made settlement in February, 1873, and was followed a few months later by J. K. and S. F. Fical and Charles Barr, and some two or three others.

In the spring of 1874, a few settlers came in, among whom were W. H. Childs, H. L. Ball, A. D. Culver, H. S. Bush and W. P. Brown, all of whom located in Kingman and took claims adjacent to towns. That spring also, W. H. Mosher located upon a claim in the northern portion of the county, at the head of Smoot Creek. In the course of the year, several others came in who located chiefly in the central portion of the county along the Ninnescah. That year an Indian scare occurred, and, in order to repel the anticipated attack, Mr. Fical was commissioned as Captain and W. H. Childs as Lieutenant, with authority to organize a militia company, but when the commissions arrived there were no men to be found, as nearly all the settlers had fled the county. It proved only to be a scare, however, as the Indians did not come as far east as Kingman County, and the settlers who had fled soon returned.

The years 1875 and 1876 were not remarkable for the arrival of many new settlers coming into the county, but in 1877, the immigration was quite large. But little, if any, settlement had been made in the eastern part of the county prior to that year; what few there were being confined to an isolated settler here and there, north of the Ninnescah. The year 1877 was not a month old, however, when Samuel Davidson, E. S. Allen, R. T. Nolan, John Jackson, C. M. Tack, H. J. Goldsborough and William Green all settled in the eastern part of the county, followed immediately after by large numbers of others. The new settlers, however, did not confine themselves to that particular locality of the county, as a great many took claims in the central portion, and quite a number located in the northern part in the vicinity of Smoot Creek.

The spring of 1877 was made memorable by the heavy rains that set in on May 11, and which continued, almost without cessation, until the 11th day of June. These rains swelled the streams to such an extent as to render them impassable, and, as there were no bridges across the Ninnescah east of Kingman, the settlers in the eastern portion of the county were cut off from their trading point, Wichita, and, in consequence thereof, were brought to almost the last extremity for provisions. For several days, parched corn furnished about the only food many of them had to subsist upon, and when the waters sufficiently subsided to render the streams fordable, but few of them had provisions to last for twelve hours. So rapidly did the eastern portion of the county settle up, that in 1878 a town was started, to which was given the name of Akron. The town site was located on Section 28, Town 28, Range 5. The starting of this town was a preliminary step toward making an attempt to secure the county seat, for, that very same year, a petition was presented to the County Commissioners, asking that the question of re-locating the county-seat be submitted to a vote of the people; but the board refused to grant the prayer of the petitioners, and the town of Akron was abandoned.

When Kingman County first began to be settled, buffalo and antelope roamed over its prairies in countless herds, and for several years after, the settlers found rare sport in hunting the king of the plains, by which their tables were plentifully supplied with meat. The last buffalo killed in the county was in 1877, by Orange Culver. In 1878 and spring of 1879, the population of the county increased rapidly, and a large immigration was distributed over the county. The two following years, more people left the county than came into it, owing to the unpropitious seasons, and shortness of crops.

A circumstance occurred in 1880, which created considerable excitement, and which is still enshrouded in mystery, and is now in court for solution. The current account of the affair is, that in 1880, M. S. Sprowls, who, at the time, was County Attorney, Milton Karr and R. G. McLain had entered into a partnership for the negotiation of loans. The system they pursued led them to be arrested at the instance of J. B. Watkins & Co., of Lawrence, who advanced the money on the loans negotiated. Sprowls & Karr gave bonds for their appearance, and McLain was lodged in jail, from which he made his escape, but was afterward re-arrested and placed in jail at Wichita, but from that he also escaped. Before court convened, Sprowls mysteriously disappeared and the supposition was, and is, that he was killed. Karr lived in Kingman, and had a brother who lived about sixteen miles from there in the country. Sprowls' relatives, who reside in Pennsylvania, in December, 1882, sent out one of Pinkerton's detectives, to solve, if possible, the mystery surrounding Sprowl's death or disappearance. The detective was in the county about a month, when he succeeded in finding a coat, about a mile south of Karr's house, that had belonged to Sprowls. In the back of the coat was two holes, supposed to be bullet holes. This fact, and the further one, that Sprowls was last seen at Karr's house, led to the arrest of the latter, who, at his preliminary examination, was required to give bond for his appearance at the District Court, where the matter is now awaiting disposition.

In 1882, immigration into the county was very large, and a great many new farms were opened. The first child born in Kingman County was born to Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Fical, in 1873, a girl, to whom was given the name of Ninnescah, in honor of the stream on which Kingman is situated. The first person to attempt farming in the county was Charles Barr, by whom the first prairie in the county was broken in 1873.

The first marriage in the county took place at the house of A. D. Culver, in Kingman, on November 2, 1875, the contracting parties being Jesse McCarty, and Miss Cecilia Capitola Scribner, the ceremony having been performed by W. H. Mosher, a Justice of the Peace; and from that time until April 3, 1883, just 100 marriage licenses had been issued from the office of the Probate Judge of the county.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION.

The county was organised on February 27, 1874. The methods by which it was accomplished are not recorded, but it is a well-known fact that when the organization took place there were not twenty bona fide settlers in the county. Gov. Thomas A. Osborn appointed J. Harmony County Clerk, J. K. Fical, J. M. Jordan and G. W. Lacy as County Commissioners to fill those offices temporarily, and designated Kingman as the temporary county seat. The officers met at Kingman March 5, 1874, for the purpose of organizing a board of permanent County Commissioners; the temporary board was declared permanent; but as J. K. Fical withdrew, W. C. Frink was appointed in his place. On petition from the citizens, the board called a special election, to be held at Kingman, April 7, 1874, to vote on the question of issuing county bonds to the amount of $70,000, for the following purposes, to wit:—$25,000 for a court house, $10,000 for bridges and $35,000 for general expenses, said bonds to be payable ten years from date of issue, bearing interest at the rate of ten per cent per annum, payable semi-annually. It was then ordered that the county and township officers should be voted for at the same election. At this election the following officers were declared elected: H. L. Ball, J. K. Fical, G. W. Lacy, Commissioners; J. Harmony, Clerk; F. S. Fical, Sheriff; J. M. Jordan, Treasurer; W. P. Brown, County Attorney; George Pitts, Probate Judge; G. A. Whicher, County Superintendent; W. J. Harmony, Register of Deeds; W. P. Brown, Coroner; R. R. Wilson, Surveyor; G. A. Whicher, District Clerk. The county seat was located at Kingman and the issue of the $70,000 in bonds authorized. These bonds were printed, but were cancelled the next spring and destroyed. What the vote of the county was at the first election is not shown by the records, but it must have been very light, as the actual settlers in the county were very few.

In 1881, the settlers in the central portion of the county thought they were sufficiently numerous, with the assistance they could receive from the southern and eastern portions of the county, to have the county seat removed from Kingman to a more central point, and with this object in view, a petition was presented to the Board of Commissioners, on October 4, 1881, asking that the question of relocating the county seat be submitted to a vote of the people. The prayer of the petitioners was granted, and an election was ordered to be held on November 7, 1881. The competitive points were Kingman and a point about seven miles southeast from there, to which had been given the name of Dale City. The result of the election was that Kingman was declared the choice of the people by a majority of eighty-five votes.

MILLS AND PRESS HISTORY.

There are only two mills in the county, both located on the Ninnescah, and both flouring mills. Both may be said to be located in the town of Kingman, as one is situated but a few rods west of the town limits and the other about a mile east. The one west of town stands on the north bank of the river, and the one to the east, on the south bank. The former was built by [illegible]tarling Turner, in 1879, and commenced running in January, 1880. It is a water-power mill, the power being obtained by cutting a race two miles and one hundred and eighty yards long, parallel with the river. By this means, a fall of fifteen feet is obtained, which furnishes excellent power. The mill is three stories high with a basement, has four run of buhrs and a capacity of fifty barrels of flour per each day of twenty-four hours. The estimated value of the mill is $20,000.

The other mill was built by William S. Grosvenor; was commenced in 1882 and completed early in 1883. Its power is also obtained by means of a race about two miles in length, cut along the south bank of the Ninnescah, by which a twelve-feet fall is obtained. This mill is three stories high, with a basement, and is fitted up with the latest improved machinery. It has seven rollers and three run of stone, and has a capacity of one hundred barrels of flour each twenty-four hours. The estimated value of this mill is $35,000.

There are few, if any, streams in the State that have better power or that possess more mill privileges than the Ninnescah. The natural fall in the stream is seven feet to the mile, and as the flow remains about the same at all seasons of the year, power sufficient could be obtained to turn the machinery of all the mills that could be built at intervals of three miles along the entire length of the Ninnescah through Kingman County. The two mills already in operation in the county furnish a very fair example of the advantages the Ninnescah offers for mill sites. These mills are only about two miles apart, and both operated by water conducted through a race, one race being cut on the north side of the stream and the other on the south. For the purpose of cutting the second race, a water-power company was organized in 1881, composed of F. E. Gillett, W. D. Sugars, C. R. Cook, J. H. Brass, Joseph Roberts and Charles Rickman. This company had the right of way for a mill race condemned, but that was about all it did towards cutting a race or erecting a mill. A new company was formed, consisting of Messrs. Babcock, Craycraft, Gillett, Sugars and Grosvenor, who purchased the franchise from the old company. Babcock, Craycraft and Grosvenor then organized themselves into a milling company, and commenced the digging of a race, which they about half completed, when the company dissolved, after which Mr. Grosvenor completed the race himself and erected one of the finest mills in Western Kansas.

The Mercury was the first newspaper published in Kingman County. It was established by J. C. Martin, the first issue bearing date June 14, 1878. The paper was small, being a five-column folio, and was published by Mr. Martin until August 19, 1880, when he sold the office and material to A. E. Saxey, who changed the name of the paper to the Kingman Blade. The Blade had but a short existence, covering only a period of a little over three months, it having ceased to exist December 9, 1880, Mr. Saxey selling the subscription list and good will of the office to the editor of the Citizen, and moving the press and material out of the county.

The Citizen was established at Kingman, September 13, 1879, by P. J. Conklin, as sole editor and proprietor, by whom the paper was published until March, 1881, when he sold the office and material to George E. Filley, who has continued to publish the paper since that time, and who still continues to publish it as sole editor and proprietor. The Citizen is a six-column, eight-page paper, Republican in politics, and has a circulation of 850.

The Republican was established at Cleveland, in Kingman County, in July, 1881, by Conklin & Childs, and appeared first as the Cleveland Star. November 1, 1881, Conklin & Childs sold to Raymond & Myers, who continued to publish it at Cleveland until February 1, 1882, when they moved it to Kingman and changed its name to the Republican. In July, 1882, Raymond & Myers sold the paper to E. H. Farnsworth, the present editor and proprietor. The Republican is a seven-column, four page paper, Republican in politics, and has a circulation of about 450.

SCHOOL AND OTHER STATISTICS.

There were in 1882, in Kingman County, thirty-seven organized school districts, but since the close of the school year which ended July 31, 1882, several new districts have been organized. There are in the county thirty-eight schoolhouses, of which thirty-two are frame, five sod, and one stone. The first schoolhouse built in the county, was a small frame building in Kingman that was erected in 1874, of which the first teacher was Miss Ada Crane. The school commenced with an attendance of five pupils. In 1882, the school population of the county, between the ages of five and twenty-one years, was 926, of which 496 were males and 430 females. The enrollment in the public schools was 772, of which 408 were males and 364 females, and the average daily attendance was 548. The number of teachers employed in 1882, was 35, being thirteen males and twenty-two females, and the avarage salary paid to the former was, per month, $25.06, and to the latter, $21.15. The number of districts that sustained public school for three months, or over, during the year, was twenty-four, and the number failing to sustain school for three months was thirteen. The average assessed valuation of each school district in the county was $17,643, and the average number of mills levied for school purposes was fifteen. In 1882, the county had a school bonded indebtedness of $[illegible],365, and the estimated value of school property was $25,000. There were twenty-four certificates granted during the year to persons to teach, of which one was of the first grade, seventeen of the second, and six of the third. The balance in the hands of the District Treasurer, August 1, 1881, was $296.50, the amount received from district taxes, was $1,975.68, from State and county funds, $429.59, from sale of school bonds, $3,230, from all other sources, $2.452.35, making a total of $8,384.21. The total expenditures during the same period for all school purposes, was $7,295.17, leaving a balance in the hands of the District Treasurer on July 31, 1882, of $1,089.04.

In 1879, the number of acres in the county, included in farms, was 75,882. Of this number, 20,868 acres were sown to field crops, of which 5,557 were sown to wheat, and 10,918 to corn, leaving only 4,393 acres for all other kinds of crops. The acreage included in farms in 1880 was not quite so large as in 1879, being only 75,161 acres, or 721 less than the preceding year. While the total acreage in farms was less, that of field crops was greater by 11,462 acres. This increase in crop acreage about corresponds with the increased acreage of wheat and corn, the former being 10,722 acres, and the latter, 15,394, or a total of 26,116, leaving 6,214 acres for all other crops. In 1881, the number of acres included in farms, was 98,935, an increase over the preceding year of 23,774 acres, the increase in field crops being 14,651 acres. The wheat acreage that year, was 12,569 acres, and that of corn, 18,180, or a total of 30,749, so that there was left for other field crops, 16,232 acres. The number of acres included in farms in 1882, had grown to 112,627, being an increase over 1881 of 13,692, or 10,082 less than the increase of 1881. The decrease in the wheat acreage that year compared with 1881, was 3,272 acres, while the corn increase was 3,180 acres. Of the portion left for other field crops, embracing 11,629 acres, 8,090 acres of it was devoted to meadows and the cultivation of tame grasses. These figures show a gain in the number of acres included in farms, during a period of three years, of 36,745, or an average each year of a little over 12,000 acres.

The following table will show the increase that has taken place in the live stock of the county, from 1879 to 1882, with two or three other products:

YEAR.	HORSES.	MULES & ASSES.	MILCH COWS.	OTHER CATTLE.	SHEEP.	SWINE.	SOLD FOR SLAUGHTER.	WOOL CLIP, LBS.	BUTTER PRODUCT, LBS.	EGGS AND POULTRY.
1879	537	222	377	504	596	919	$ 165	91	6,741
1880	931	349	1,588	1,532	810	1,805	4,680	1,200	33,653
1881	767	350	922	2,320	6,204	1,642	15,401	1,050	55,849	$5,063
1882	977	346	1,883	5,155	22,107	2,854	31,368	12,124	60,750	1,942

The above table shows a wonderful advancement in material wealth in the course of three years.

There are many other evidences in the county of advancement in material wealth that are not shown in the statistical records. The primitive sod houses and "dug outs" are rapidly disappearing and good comfortable frame houses taking their place. The records are also silent as to the high state of improvement that many of the farms throughout the county have reached, all of which adds to the material wealth. The herd law having been in force in the county since its organization, but very little money has been expended in fencing, there being, all told, but 15,182 rods of fence in the county, of which 828 rods are board, twenty stone, 6,345 hedge, and 7,990 wire. Artificial forests embrace nearly 1,000 acres, while the fruit trees in bearing are limited to twenty-four apple, 8,050 peach, thirty-two plum, and fifty-four cherry. The number of fruit trees not in bearing are: Apple, 7,359, pear, 209, peach, 73,230, plum, 1,975 and cherry, 2,911. These figures are taken from the statistical record of the county for 1882. Agricultural implements in the county for the same year were valued at $16,068.

The settlement of the county began in 1873, but for some ye[illegible]migration was rather slow, and the county made but little progress toward increasing [illegible] population. Settlers did not come into the county to any great number until 1877, but during that and the year following, new comers began to locate in different portions of the county. The census of 1879 shows that in that year there were in the county 544 families and a total population of 2,508. By 1880, the families had increased to 727, and the population to 3,125. The unpropitious seasons of 1879 and 1880, caused a good many to leave the [illegible] and in 1881 the number of families in the county had dropped from 727 to 601, and the [illegible] population from 3,125 to 2,757. In 1882, the population took an upward turn, and the Assessor's returns of the spring of that year shows the population to have been 2,864, a gain of 107 over that of the preceding year. During the fall of 1882, and the spring of 1883, a very large accession was made to the population, and the Assessors returns, so far as completed, indicate the population of the county in the spring of 1883 to have been between 4,000 and 5,000.

The assessed valuation of all taxable property in 1882 was $617,529.30, and the bonded indebtedness of the county was $31,400.

KINGMAN.

Kingman is the shire town of the county. It is situated on the Ninnescah River, the town site being partly on one side of the stream and partly on the other. The greater portion of the town, however, in fact all of it, excepting some three or four houses, is located on the north side of the river. The town was laid out by J. K. and F. S. Fical, who had taken adjoining claims, and is located on Lots 3 and 4 of Section 5, Town 28 south, Range 7 west of the sixth principal meridian, and the south half of the northwest quarter of said section, town and range.

The town site was surveyed and platted in March, 1874, by Jesse McCarty. Before the Fical brothers pre-empted their claims, a party from Hutchinson, as early as 1872, organized a town company and located a town on what is now the town site of Kingman, but finding they could not get a deed to the land, they abandoned it. The town they located they named Sherman. After the site was abandoned by the Hutchinson Town Company, the Ficals pre-empted the land in 1873. But one house had been erected on the town site of Sherman, and that was one that had been moved in from the country by Norman Ingham and rebuilt. After the Ficals had surveyed and platted the town site they conveyed a half interest in it to one J. M. Jordan. In 1874, building on the town site began, H. L. Ball putting up the first house on the new town site, to which he gave the name of the "Kingman House," having built the house for a hotel. That year a small frame schoolhouse was erected, and also a small frame building for county purposes, being the same still occupied by the county officers. A small frame residence was put up, in 1874, by A. D. Culver, and a little frame store by E. C. Manning, who was the first person in the town to start in mercantile business, although to classify the offering of what few goods he had for sale as a mercantile business is clothing it with considerable dignity. The town now may be said to be fairly started. It had a hotel, a schoolhouse, a small (and very small) court house, a store and two or three small residences.

The town having been started, it remained stationary for a long time, no further improvement taking place until 1878. In the meantime, Manning's store had changed hands and had passed into the possession of one C. C. Barnard. In the fall of 1877, a young attorney, named George E. Filley, arrived in town and quartered himself at the Kingman House. His practice commenced by husking corn for his board. One evening, Mr. Barnard went to him and told him that he thought his business would warrant him in employing a clerk, and offered Mr. Filley the position, which he accepted. An invoice was taken of the goods, and they were found to consist of a few plugs of tobacco, two or three gallons of whisky a few corset strings and some shoe laces, with a few pieces of calico. Mr. Barnard went off for a few days hunting, but before leaving he prepared a ledger from some coarse wrapping paper and instructed Mr. Filley as to how he should enter up his charges. Mr. Barnard returned in about two weeks and found his stock of goods all sold, even to the last drop of whisky and the last plug of tobacco. He found $2, cash, in the drawer, the balance of the goods having been sold on credit and charged. The customers were Parks, Roberts, Ball and Chandler. Mr. Barnard being desirous of replenishing his stock, started out next morning with his pocket full of bills on a collection tour. He called on Chandler, who gave him an order on Roberts for the amount of his bill, which the latter accepted, he in turn giving an order on Parks for the amount of his account with Chandler's added. Parks accepted and gave an order on Ball, the latter repeating the operation by giving an order on Chandler, and when the day closed Mr. Barnard found himself about as rich as when he started out in the morning. Goods must be had, however, if he meant to do business, and the following morning he and Mr. Filley started to Castleton with a team and wagon for a new supply, and with a cash capital of $2. On entering the store at Castleton, the eye of Mr. Barnard rested upon a tobacco-cutter, which he immediately purchased and for which he paid $1.50. He next selected his stock, to the amount of about $100, which he loaded in the wagon and was about to drive away, when the merchant demanded his pay, in default of which, the goods were unloaded and carried back into the store, and Mr. Barnard and his clerk started back to Kingman, sans goods, sans money, but with a $1.50 tobacco-cutter.

The year 1878 was quite a prosperous one for Kingman, and a good many new settlers located in the place. In the spring of that year, a party from Hutchinson, composed of W. R. Brown, Hiram Raff and F. E. Gillett, in connection with George Craycraft, E. W. Hinton and George E. Filley, of Kingman, organized themselves into what was known as the Kingman Town Company. Prior to this, the original town site, located on the north side of the river, and laid out by the Ficals in 1874, had passed into the hands of a company, and the object of the new company was to locate a town on the high ground south of the river, which, in its growth, would absorb the older town. For the first year the new town made rapid progress, and several buildings were moved over from the north side. A good frame hotel, the Laclede House, was erected by the town company, and quite a number of residences were put up. The first built and opened in the new town was by N. S. Arnold, and for a time it seemed as if the object of the projectors would be accomplished.

The north town was not idle while the south town was pushing on its improvements. In the former, a grocery store was put up by Newton Porch, a lumber yard was opened by Frank Leach, who also built a neat residence, store buildings were put up by S. Turner, C. W. Myers, and Livingston & Reynolds, and a bakery was put up by F. Tull. Besides these, quite a number of dwelling houses were erected. The year 1879 was also a prosperous and progressive one for Kingman, and especially for the old town. Business houses were put up by Chamberlain & Glunt, L. C. Almond, and A. L. Garrison.

The town started on the south side of town reached the zenith of its glory about the end of the first year of its existence. It having been discovered that well water was almost, if not quite, inaccessible, those who had located on the south side began to move over to the north side, where the finest water could be had with but little difficulty, and all that is left on the south side now to tell that a town was ever started there is the old "Poland Hotel" which has been converted into a grocery store, all the other buildings having been moved to the north side, or old town.

In 1880, the town was improved by the erection of three store buildings and several dwelling houses. One of the stores was a building that had been commenced some time previous by the county for a court house, but after having put up the foundation and part of the walls they discontinued work upon it and sold it to Babcock & Craycraft who finished it and converted it into a very fine hardware store. It is a stone building and the only business house of the kind in town.

Up to 1881, Kingman had nothing in the shape of a bank, but on March 10, of that year, a private bank was established by Gassard Brothers and H. L. Strohm. Subsequently the bank passed into the hands of a company, under whose management it was incorporated on the 25th of February, 1882. The officers of the bank are L. C. Almond, President; O. M. Thrapp, Vice President, and John P. Jones, Cashier. The resources of the bank, as shown by its published statement, made December 30, 1882, were $30,454.19.

In 1882, the Laclede House, which had been standing on the south side as a relic of the town that had been started on that side of the river in 1878, was torn down and moved to the north side, where it was rebuilt and greatly enlarged. A hardware store was built and opened that year by Karr & Lewis, and a drug store was built by E. W. Hinton. The finest improvement made that year, although not completed until early in 1883, was the erection of a very fine stone schoolhouse thirty-two by sixty feet. It contains two large rooms, which, with the old frame building, which is still used as a primary school, furnishes ample school accommodation for the children of the town.

The spring of 1883 opened out very promising for great improvements during the year. As early as the 1st of April, two new stores had been built, and a new building was put up by Dr. E. W. Myers, for a post office. Ten new dwelling houses were in course of construction, and two blacksmith shops and a wagon shop had been completed. The town has yet no church edifice, but the Methodists, United Brethren, Presbyterians and Baptists, have each organizations and hold services regularly.

In April, 1883, the Methodists were making preparations to build and were having the material hauled on the ground for that purpose.

The town has a population of about 350, and the business of the place is represented by four general merchandising stores, two hardware, two groceries, two drug stores, two millinery establishments, one furniture store, one jewelry, one bank, two hotels, one restaurant, one harness and saddlery, one lumber yard, three livery stables and two newspapers. The legal and medical professions are well represented. The town has two benevolent societies, one of Odd Fellows and one of United Workmen. Kingman Lodge, No. 190, I. O. O. F., was organized in February, 1882, with twenty-two charter members. The first officers of the lodge were: I. W. Rush, N. G.; L. C. Almond, V. G.; F. L. Shupp, P. S.; I. E. Wingart, R. S., H. H. Graves, Treasurer; G. W. Day, W.; and S. F. Utley, Conductor. The lodge has now a membership of thirty, and the officers are: N. S. Arnold, N. G.; H. H. Graves, V. G.; C. W. Kelly, R. S.; G. H. Willis, P. S.; N. Button, Treasurer; S. F. Utley, W.; and F. E. Gillett, Conductor. The representative to the Grand Lodge is L. C. Almond.

Kingman Lodge, No. 79, A. O. U. W., was organized October 5, 1881, with fifteen charter members. The first officers of the lodge were: G. E. Filley, P. M. W.; N. S. Arnold, M. W.; D. C. Taylor, For.; J. T. Eppley, O.; C. R. Cook, G.; Charles Rickman, Rec.; W. N. Porch, Fin.; H. Wait, R.; A. G. Bowran, I. W. and S. M. Roberts, O. W. The present membership is sixteen, and the officers are about the same as above, except that in a few instances, changes have taken place in the positions.

The members of the Masonic fraternity have an enrollment of forty-six and are taking steps to organize a lodge.

OSAGE COUNTY.

LOCATION AND NATURAL RESOURCES.

OSAGE County is situated about midway across the State, north and south, and about fifty miles from its eastern boundary. In extent it is twenty-four miles east and west, and thirty miles north and south. It is bounded on the north by Shawnee County, on the east by Douglas and Franklin, on the south by Coffey, and on the west by Lyon and Wabaunsee.

Three quite large streams cross the county. The largest of these is the Marais des Cygnes River, which flows across the southern part, entering from the west, flowing across the corner of Barclay Township into Arvonia; thence east across that, Olivet and Melvern townships; thence northeast across Agency Township. The principal tributaries of the above named stream from the south are: Mud, Puleston, Winnifred, Coal, Long, Rock, and Tuqua creeks. On both the north and south sides are numerous other small creeks, but a short distance apart, which contain running water, for a portion of the year. Salt Creek flows across the county from west to east, through the central part and crosses the townships of Superior, Valley Brook and Agency, emptying into the Marais des Cygnes, near the eastern boundary. Mute Creek is its principal southern tributary. On the north side are Swede and Jersey creeks.

In the northern part of the county is Dragoon Creek, which entering from the west flows across the southwest corner of Burlingame Township; thence southeast across Dragoon, and across the northeast corner of Superior; thence nearly east across Fairfax, from whence it flows southeast across Junction and the corner of Agency, where it enters the Marais des Cygnes near the eastern limits of the county. Its principal tributaries on the south are Soldier and Smith creeks. On the north are Switzler, School, Pop Corn and One Hundred and Ten creeks. Besides these are Wakarusa, Berry's, Slowbridge, Elk and Appanoose creeks. The above named streams are the principal ones in the county, though it is intersected by many small ones that contain running water for a portion of the year.

Of the streams named above, the names are derived as follows: Marais des Cygnes means "the marsh of the swans." Dragoon is so named from the fact that a United States soldier died on its western bank, at an early date; Switzler from the name of a man who was run over and killed by a wagon, while descending the eastern bank, at a point on the old Sante Fe freight road. Salt Creek derives its name from a salt basin near its mouth. One Hundred and Ten Creek, from the fact that the old crossing of the Santa Fe freight road was that number of miles from Independence, Mo.; the Appanoose and Tauqua from those of two of the head-men of the Sac and Fox Indians. The Wakarusa is so named from a wild plant, partly covered with a fine hairy fibre, that once grew along its banks: Mute Creek was named from a deaf mute having held a claim on its banks at an early day.

Along the streams are low bottom lands, varying all the way from a few rods to three miles in width. Back from the valleys the surface of the land is undulating, and in some places much broken, and even bluffy. About 10 per cent of the county is low valley land, and 90 per cent upland; 10 per cent of the county is forest, and 90 per cent prairie. The average width of the bottom lands is nearly half a mile. The greater part of the upland is tillable, much of it very level and covered with well cultivated farms.

About 10 per cent of the county is covered by a natural growth of timber. This is found generally along the banks of the streams, in belts varying from twenty to upward of one hundred rods in width. The principal varieties are walnut, elm, oak, hackberry, cottonwood, coffee bean, mulberry and hickory. Besides these natural belts of timber, there are a large number of groves of forest trees, under cultivation on the farms, and which all told, comprise many acres.

Coal underlies the greater part of the area of the county, but it is not found in large quantities, or mined to any great extent, excepting in a belt comprising about 25 per cent of the county's area. This line follows along the line of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, and extends back for some distance on each side of it. It is found at a depth below the surface, of from two to more than one hundred feet, but at an average depth of from fifty to seventy. The veins are from twelve to thirty-six inches in thickness. The quality is good, the mines numerous, and the shipments are great. It is used extensively by the railroad companies, and for local, domestic and manufacturing purposes.

Limestone is found in all parts of the county. It is of an excellent quality for building purposes. A great number of the buildings of the county are constructed of this material. Besides this the stone is used to a great extent for fencing. Yellow ochre is found in abundance in every township. There is also an almost unlimited supply of fire and pottery clay, which is utilized to some extent.

*EARLY HISTORY.

The northern part of the county as far south as a line one-half mile north of the northern boundary of Township 16, comprised a part of the Shawnee Indian Reservation, which was opened to settlement by the act of Congress of May 30, 1854. Of this land a strip nine miles wide, and extending east and west, was a part of Shawnee County. South of this, and extending across the entire county, was a narrow strip, which extended to the southern limits of the Shawnee Reservation.

The southern part of the county, from the above named line, comprised the greater part of the Sac and Fox Indian Reservation, which was a tract of land twenty miles north and south, and thirty miles east and west. Of this, a strip twenty-four miles east and west, and extending to its southern limits, together with the narrow strip lying between it and Shawnee County, was set apart by the legislature of 1855, and called Weller County, but all that was open to settlement was the narrow body of Shawnee lands.

The portion of Osage County then included in Shawnee was soon divided into two townships, called Burlingame and Wakarusa. These have since retained nearly their original boundaries, and the name of the latter is changed to Ridgeway.

On February 11, 1859, by act of legislature, the name of Weller County was changed to Osage, an act for its organization being also passed.

On February 23, 1860, the Legislature passed an act, attaching the nine mile strip formerly belonging to Shawnee, to Osage County; its present boundaries being then established.

In the year 1827, the United States Government opened a mail route from Independence, Mo., to Santa Fe, N. M., on the route that had been selected some time before by the freighters, and known as the Santa Fe Trail. This was the finest natural road in the world, and the immense freighting business over it continually increased, until by 1854, millions of dollars worth of freight was transported over it annually. This road entered the present Osage County from the east, about on the lines between Townships 14 and 15, extended west, crossing One Hundred and Ten Creek, and continuing in nearly a direct line to where Burlingame now is, and up what is now Santa Fe Avenue in that town, and thence west crossing the western boundary of the county.

The Fort Leavenworth and Santa Fe Trail extended across the northwestern part of the county, and united with the main road some distance farther west.

There was also a road from where Baldwin City now is, to the Sac and Fox Agency. Besides which there were many cross roads, and short cuts from different points, but the Santa Fe Trail was the terminus of them all.

When Kansas was formed as a territory, May 30, 1854, the only white settlers within the present limits of the county were two men living on One Hundred and Ten Creek, at the crossing of the Santa Fe Trail, and who had married Shawnees. Besides these, there were a few at the Sac and Fox Agency.

In 1844, the Sac and Fox Indians were removed from Iowa to their Kansas Reservation, the limits of which have been described. The first Indian Agency was established on the Marais des Cygnes River, at Greenwood, Franklin County. Sometime afterwards it was removed about eight miles further up the river to where Quenemo in Osage County, now is, the latter place being known as the new agency.

In 1854, there was a trading-post at the Agency owned by Baker & Street of Westport, Mo., but kept by a man named Case, who lived there with his family. The other white people there were Gen. Whistler, an ex-army officer, and Indian trader, and John Goodell. Both of these men had long before married into the tribe and were living with their Indian wives. Goodell's wife was Quenemo, from whom the town of that name derives its appellation.

At that time the tribe numbered about fifteen hundred and with the exception of the chiefs and head men, lived in wigwam villages at different points on the reservation.

In 1858, the Government caused to be erected at the expense of the Indians, a large number of houses of wood and stone along the Marais des Cygnes and its tributaries. Saw-mills were erected at the old agency, and a large quantity of lumber was sawed. The contract for building the houses was let to R. S. Stevens, who received payment in Indian scrip. They were rough and cheap buildings, with two rooms, a porch along one side, and were built in unhealthy places. It was with the greatest reluctance that the Indians paid for them, and then it required the greatest effort to get them to live there. They soon tore up the floors and broke out the windows. They drew, with charcoal, rough pictures on the walls, of steamboats, locomotives, and other objects of wonder they had seen in the east; and pictures of the various wild animals of the plains. They soon deserted the houses, declaring it made them sick to live in them, and again returned to their wigwams.

By a treaty in October, 1859, the Indians ceded to the Government all the western part of their reservation, which was to be held in trust and sold for their benefit.

The land disposed of by the above treaty was opened for sale under sealed bids in 1860. A great many bids were made by residents of Kansas, but they were either overbid by parties in Washington, or else other lands of a poor quality on which they did not bid at all were awarded them. The best of the land was bought by Hugh McCullough, Secretary of the Treasury; John P. Usher, Secretary of the Interior; and Wm. P. Dole, Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The greater part of the remaining lands were awarded to Perry Fuller, R. S. Stevens, and John McManus, who were holders of large amounts of Indian scrip, which they used in payment at its par value.

Although contrary to the wishes of the tribe, in 1867 a treaty was made with its chiefs and head men, by which they were to give up the remainder of their reservation to the United States Government. In October, 1868, the treaty was ratified by the President, and in due time the Indians were removed to Indian Territory. They then numbered 800. The best of the lands were given away to the chiefs and Indian head men, and to a few white men who had been instrumental in securing the treaty. The remainder were opened to actual settlement and sold for $1.50 per acre.

The first settler to locate within the limits of the county after May 30, 1854, was John Frele, who came with his family soon after that date and stopped at the point on the Santa Fe trail where Burlingame now is. The only person living anywhere in the neighborhood was a Shawnee Indian who had a cabin, by a spring, in what is now the northern part of the above named town. Frele bought this claim, and moved into the cabin. The next winter a son was born to Mrs. Frele. This was the first white child born in the county.

Before August 1, 1854, I. B. Titus, James and John Aiken, Alphonso Prentis, and a few others took claims on Switzler Creek. John Skidmore, Wm. Aiken, John Ward, Hollam Rice, Samuel Devaney and Henry Harvey, with his sons George and Samuel, located on Dragoon Creek.

On August 2, Fry P. and Mobillon McGee arrived at One Hundred and Ten Creek, and bought out the claims of two white men then living there. On the same date Moran McGee and C. N. Linkenauger selected claims near the mouth of Switzler Creek. Of the settlers up to this time all were Pro-slavery men except Harvey and his two sons, who were Quakers.

In September, 1854, the American Settlement Company was formed in New York City, and offices were opened on Broadway. The project of the company was to locate a town-site somewhere in Kansas and to build up a large city. The proposed town was to be named Council City, and was to be laid out with streets one hundred and fifty feet wide, along which trees were to be planted, and a park of eighty acres to be laid off. A committee, consisting of Loton Smith, George M. Barnes and J. W. Kerr was appointed to visit Kansas and select a location. Starting at once, they prospected in various parts of the territory, and selected a site just east of Switzler Creek and adjoining the present Burlingame.

In the fall of 1854, quite a large party started out from the western counties of Pennsylvania to settle in a colony somewhere in Kansas. Most of them were from Mercer, Bradford and Indiana counties. Prominent among them were George Bratton, Absalom W. Hoover, Joseph McDonald, James Bothel, Wm. Cable, Wm. Howard, Samuel Allison, J. R. Stewart, Marcus J. Rose and Thomas Black. On the arrival of the Pennsylvanians at Kansas City, they fell in with another party from New York and other Eastern States, who were waiting for the return of the Council City locating committee. Early in November, the committee having returned, the entire party, numbering about one hundred, started out. On the 9th they encountered a severe snow storm, but they pressed on, and on the 14th arrived at their destination.

Soon after their arrival a number of the party selected claims as near the proposed town-site as possible, but the greater number of them, who had been clerks, or engaged in occupations that unfitted them for hard labor, and who had come with the expectation of gaining untold wealth without work, were so discouraged that they started back within twenty-four hours. Of those who located claims only fourteen remained during the winter, as cold weather was fast approaching and they had no places to live and but few tools to work with. George Bratton, Absalom W. Hoover and some others were accompanied by their families, and they built cabins or dug caves at once, and there they lived quite pleasantly during the winter. The weather was mild and there was little suffering. Early in the spring nearly all who had located claims the fall before returned, and all went to work making improvements on their farms.

The first election was held on March 30, 1855, for the purpose of electing a delegate to the first Territorial legislature. Gov. Reeder named Council City as the voting place. On the day previous to the election, a large body of Missourians, armed with rifles and having a large quantity of whisky arrived at Council City, and camped in the woods just north of Titus' cabin. They spent the night in drinking whisky, yelling, cursing the Free-State cause and firing their guns.

On the morning of March 30, the regularly appointed Election Board met at the unfinished log cabin of I. B. Titus, about fifty yards south of the bridge that now crosses Switzler Creek east of Burlingame. No sooner were the polls declared open than the Missourians appeared on the scene, tore a window out of the cabin, drove away the judges, and appointing others of their own number, took possession of the polls, and drove the few Free-State men away. They spent the day in drinking, swaggering about, with threats of violence toward the Council City people; all voted, and some of them several times. At night they closed the polls and moved back as far as One Hundred and Ten Creek, where they camped, continued their drunken orgies and went through the form of counting the votes, declaring Mobillon McGee to be elected by an unanimous vote (about 250). Though he had located a claim the fall before, McGee was then a resident of Westport, Mo. The next morning the ruffians resumed their march to Missouri.

Gov. Reeder was then at Muncie, and was at once apprised of the violent measures used at Council City, when he ordered a new election, at which Hollam Rice was elected, receiving twenty-eight votes, every one in the district. Gov. Reeder issued a certificate of election to Rice, but upon meeting the legislature excluded him and admitted McGee.

Ridgeway, then called Wakarusa, had been settled some time before. The first settlers were Allen Pierson and his two sons, John and Elias. Soon afterward O. H. Bronson, a Pro-slavery man, located there. The March election was conducted about the same as at Council City, and Bronson declared elected to the legislature.

In the spring of 1855 there was quite a large immigration, the greater number locating around Council City. A large block house called the council house was erected. A portion of it now stands in the western part of Burlingame. The town site of Council City was surveyed and staked into lots, and comprised all the territory between Dragoon and Switzler, for three miles above the junction.

The following were among the early settlers in the county: Phillip C. Schuyler came in the spring of 1855, and purchased a claim comprising what is now a large portion of the city of Burlingame. Samuel R. Caniff came with Schuyler, and purchased the claim of John Frele, and moved thereon at once. This is now a part of Burlingame. Abel Polley, Wm. Tillinghast, Abram Leonard and E. O. Perin selected claims on Dragoon Creek, the last two named erecting cabins at what was afterward Superior. John Drew settled northwest of Burlingame, and David Hoover northeast. Henry and John Smith, A. R. Bothel and Ithiel Streit located on Soldier Creek; Wm. Lord, A. N. Havens and Armi Smith on Plumb Creek. J. G. and Henry Morrell, and Victor McDonald bought out claims on Switzler Creek, and Lucien, William, Charles and Edmund Fish located two miles further east.

Among other early settlers, J. Q. Cowee, B. V. Beckus, J. B. Sanders, John R. Stagg, Caleb Beckus, Orlo and M. C. Drinkwater, James Brownlee, T. J. Bass and T. Clelland settled in the Wakarusa Valley. They were all earnest Free-State men. Jonathan West settled still further east, near the north line of the county. In what is now Ridgeway Township, prominent among the first settlers were Wm. Atchison, Geo. Roberts, H. H. Heberling, Robert and Morris Clark, Joseph Law, and Phillip T. Huff, the last of whom was the first Justice of the Peace for that township. Of the first settlers on One Hundred and Ten Creek were Wm. D. Harris, formerly an Indian trader and postmaster on the Santa Fe trail, Geo. J. Johnson, Henry and Charles Rubo, James T. Shepard, John Rehrig, L. M. Wyatt and D. B. Burdick. In the extreme southern part of Ridgeway Township were T. M. Gilmore, John H. Hook, Robert Watts, James and John Coleman, Frank, Peter and James Duffey. Between Burlingame and One Hundred and Ten Creek were E. S. Borland and Michael Supple. In the eastern part of the county were Peter Paulson, and John and Peter Peterson.

The first regular religious services in the county were held in 1855, at the Council City settlement. Rev. John Lowry was the minister. He was sent out by the American Missionary Society, and for three months meetings were held regularly at the cabins of the settlers, sometimes at one place and sometimes at another. The attendance was always good, although almost the only mode of conveyance was by ox-teams.

When the town of Council City was projected Loton Smith was sent out as resident agent, but sometime in 1855 he was succeeded by James M. Winchell, who located in the spring of that year.

On March 29, 1855, Albert Cornelius, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ithiel Streit was born. This was the second birth in the county.

The first female child born in the county was Miss Emma Bratton, on June 29, 1855. She is the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. George Bratton, and is now living at Burlingame, the wife of Samuel Shibley.

The first store in the county was opened at Council City in the spring of 1855, in a log cabin just north of the spring, across the ravine. It was kept by Samuel Allison.

The first post-office was established on April 30, 1855, and called Council City. Loton Smith was appointed postmaster, but did not serve personally. James Bothel was deputy postmaster, and did most of the business. The post-office was kept at Allisen's store.

In the fall of 1855 James Bothel and Joseph McDonald bought Allison's store, and for several years were the leading merchants of the county.

Up to the fall of 1855 several deaths had taken place, and cemetery grounds were selected about one mile west from the post-office. But as it was afterward found to be on a school section, the site was abandoned and the present cemetery grounds selected.

The first Fourth of July celebration was in 1855, at the place where the county poor farm now is. About seventy-five persons were present, and speeches were made by P. C. Schuyler, Loton Smith, and J. M. Winchell.

The first marriage recorded in Osage County is that of John Riffenbark to Hannah Thompson, January 23, 1860. M. Rambo, as Justice of the Peace, performed the ceremony.

The first school was taught by Miss Louisa Todd, the daughter of Henry Todd, in a tent adjoining the council house. This was in the spring of 1855. The school was supported by subscription, the greater part being paid by bachelors.

The first settlements were made before there were any surveys, and each settler selected as nearly 240 acres as possible. They then banded together to protect each other in possession of the claims. It was afterward found that only 160 acres were allowed to a settler, and when surveyed the section lines cut the original claims into irregular fragments, and on making final proof each settler was required to make oath that he had not agreed to convey any portion of his claim to any one else. All this created general confusion, and many were the quarrels and law suits that resulted.

In the spring of 1856, the Council City town site was abandoned, and J. M. Winchell and several associates laid out a town two miles south from Burlingame, which they named Fremont. A saw-mill was at once erected on Dragoon Creek, near the mouth of Switzler. Its sawing capacity was only two hundred feet per day, and the boards were from one-half inch to one and one-half inches in thickness. Not proving a success, this mill was soon moved away.

In May, 1856, Schuyler & Caniff brought in a large steam saw-mill, and erected it near the center of the proposed town of Burlingame. A large business was soon done. The old council house was occupied as a hotel, and its very moderate accommodations were severely taxed by the influx of travelers.

During the summer of 1856 nearly every one in the settlement was sick with malarial disease, and there was no skillful physician in the neighborhood. Loton Smith and many others died from want of care and medical attendance. The people were also badly in want of necessary provisions, and were compelled to live on melons, squashes, pumpkins and green corn, or starve. As soon as the corn became hard enough to be grated, holes were punched in the bottoms of tin pans, and it was grated from the cob. Previous to that time Absalom W. Hoover had made a hand-mill of lime-stones. After the corn became ripe and hard this mill was kept running constantly. Settlers came from many miles to grind their corn here.

In 1857 the Burlingame town site was surveyed, and named in honor of Anson Burlingame, afterwards United States Minister to China.

The Burlingame Town Company was incorporated in February, 1858. About the same time the name of Carbondale was changed to Superior, and a Town Company incorporated. It was composed of J. M. Winchell with several associates from Wyandotte, who united with him and put forward strong efforts to build up the town. For some time there was strong rivalry between the two towns, and at one time it looked as if Superior would soon crush its rival. A road was opened through it from Centropolis to Allen, Dragoon Creek bridged, shops built, stores opened, and about thirty dwellings erected. Among the buildings, the Superior hotel was a very large one, and was afterwards used as hotel, court house, school-house and church. That is the only building now left, and is occupied as a barn and granary.

There was another town projected in 1857, east of Switzler Creek, and called Arvilla. A store and two dwellings were erected, but finding difficulty in obtaining water, the new town was soon abandoned.

J. M. Winchell, Rev. Alonzo Shurtleff, and Prof. Daniels, then State Geologist of Wisconsin, formed themselves into a Town Company, and laid out a new town on the old Fremont site, which they called Carbondale. A steam saw and grist-mill was erected, and a Presbyterian Church organized, with Rev. James Brownlee, pastor, and preaching was held in a log-cabin.

Prairie City was the name of another town site on the Sante Fe trail. Its location was on Section 6, Township 15, Range 15 east. The first settlements began in October, 1856. The Town Company was formed in Kentucky. Dr. Robert Lester was one of its officers. The other early settlers were James Gilchrist, James Gilchrist, Jr., P. L. Doane, Joseph Bridgewalder, and John M. Carr. Dr. Lester was soon killed accidentally, and the town site was abandoned.

Young America was the name of a town projected on One Hundred and Ten Creek. The Town Company numbered fifty-three members. Among them were Hon. D. B. Burdick and Dr. Anderson. The place never succeeded in becoming a town.

Eureka was the name of a town projected by the Pennsylvania Colony in the fall of 1854. The site just east of Switzler Creek was soon abandoned, the settlers becoming interested in the Council City movement.

In 1858, another town called Havana was laid out, about four miles west from Burlingame. For a time it looked as if it would become the great town of the neighborhood. The City Company was made up of wealthy Germans of Chicago and St. Louis. About fifty German and French families located in the vicinity, large farms were opened, and in the town a store with a large stock of goods was opened, the machinery for a large mill was brought on, about half-a-dozen dwellings, and a large stone hotel erected. A large stone distillery and brewery was commenced. But its prosperity soon came to an end. The leading merchant failed, the members of the company quarreled, the settlers soon became dissatisfied with a country life, and it was not long until all left never to return, and the town became extinct. The hotel is now a barn, and the distillery became Davis' grist-mill.

A town was projected just west of the point where the Santa Fe trail crossed One Hundred and Ten Creek. It was called Versailles, and the Town Company was incorporated on February 20, 1857, with Henry P. Throop, D. T. Mitchell, and J. C. Thompson, as its members. For a time considerable business was done, and a large hotel built, but it never assumed the proportions of a town and has long since ceased to exist. The site was Section 2, Township 15, Range 15.

Previous to the Versailles town site, Fry P. McGee and W. D. Harris entered a town site at the Santa Fe trail crossing of One Hundred and Ten Creek, and named it Washington. No attempt was made to build up a town, however, though it became quite an important trading point.

Indiana City was laid out on a neighboring section, and a town site entered. Four small houses were framed, all ready to put up, in Louisville, Ky, and shipped out and erected. The town never became any larger. This was a portion of the present Scranton town site.

In Ridgeway Township was the site of two proposed towns, to be called respectively Georgetown and Ridgeway. Neither of them grew to be towns of any importance, though the latter is now a station on the Lawrence & Southwestern Railroad, and has a store, post-office, blacksmith shop, and a number of houses. A Masonic Lodge was organized in 1874, with the following charter members. C. J. McDivitt, Geo. W. Watson, C. H. Easton, J. S. Riley, H. K. Riley, Geo. R. Emory, J. B. Emory, J. S. Barbour and Joseph Law.

POLITICAL AND OTHER TROUBLES.

In 1855, the first Free-State elections were held, and here too, some political frauds were committed, as at a caucus held by them, more ballots were cast than there were voters present. A Free-State legislature at Topeka was elected, and from the Council City district, Henry Todd and Wm. Toothman were elected members of the Lower House; and Lucien Fish of the Senate. Early the next year, this legislature met and elected Philip C. Schuyler Secretary of State, but as the United States Congress did not recognize its legality, he never fulfilled the duties of the office.

The first military company was organized in 1855, and was called the "Old Free-State Guards." Henry Todd was Captain; Wm. Toothman, First Lieutenant; G. I. Drew, Second Lieutenant, and L. D. Joy, Orderly Sergeant. It was about the close of the year when the organization of the company was completed, after which it marched to the defense of Lawrence at once. Gen. Lane, Pomeroy, John Brown, Schuyler and Winchell were already there and manifested great joy at the appearance of the company. Each of its members was armed with a six-shooter rifle. These guns proved to be utterly worthless, and Loton Smith took them to Missouri, where he represented himself to be a friend to the Pro-slavery party, and sold them for a high price, and with the proceeds bought good rifles for the company.

During the year 1856, the troubles between the Free-State men and the border ruffians assumed a serious aspect. In June another military company was organized by the free-soilers. A portion of Buford's Company from the Southern States was sent to drive the Free-State men from the country. They camped on One Hundred and Ten Creek, where they remained all summer, made several raids on the Free-State settlers, and committed many outrages. Joseph McDonald was robbed of a wagon-load of provisions, on the Santa Fe trail, while en route from Westport. As he was a cripple and a non-resistant his life was spared. He then went to Leavenworth for another load, and narrowly escaped being robbed again.

Horace L. Jones, who lived at Council City, had succeeded in getting possession of three hundred dollars of the New York Tribune fund, raised for the benefit of the destitute of Kansas. He refused to give it up or expend it for the sick, but sent a man with his team to Leavenworth, to purchase a load of flour and groceries, with which to start a store. On his way back the load and team were captured by the border ruffians, who sent the man down the river on a raft. Jones was considered one of the leading men of the settlement, and was known throughout the Territory as "Buffalo" Jones. Two or three years afterwards he left Osage County.

From June until December, it was impossible to get provisions from the Missouri River, unless the wagons were protected by an armed guard. Many depredations were committed on Free-State settlers. On the 4th of July nearly every man in the settlement went to Topeka to celebrate, and to prevent the border ruffians from making an attack on the Free-State Legislature, which was to convene on that day. They were dispersed at the point of the bayonet, by a body of soldiers under Col. Sumner, and immediately returned home. A short time after, a plan was laid by Buford's men to burn and rob the entire settlement, which was prevented only by the timely warning of Fry P. McGee, a Pro-slavery man.

In 1857, immigration to the county increased, and soon the Free-State men had a very large majority. During this year political affairs moved on more smoothly. The laws passed by the "bogus legislature" of 1855, were not generally respected. During the summer a Deputy United States Marshal appeared for the purpose of collecting a poll tax of one dollar, imposed on each voter, by the Pro-slavery Legislature. He was resisted, and after being shot at a few times, he disappeared, never to return. Some time during the fall, a party of Free-State men came in from a distance, and began committing outrages on Pro-slavery men. Fry P. McGee, John Ward and Charles Skidmore were robbed of nearly all their personal property. The Free-State people of the neighborhood, however, followed them up, and compelled them to give up a portion of their plunder. At an election in the fall, Lucien Fish was chosen as a member of the Legislature. At a Free-State convention, P. C. Schuyler was nominated for Secretary of State, and with the rest of the ticket was elected, under the Lecompton Constitution.

In January, 1858, an election was held on the Lecompton Constitution. Only three votes were cast for it in what is now Osage County.

In February, 1858, the bogus laws were repealed, and the next month Justices of the Peace were elected for a term of two years. For Burlingame, Wm. Lord and John Drew were elected. The township had been formed on September 21, 1857, and the October election was held at a building opposite the Burlingame Hotel. The judges of election were Thos. Russell, Wm. Lord and C. D. Marple.

In 1859, a terrible storm of wind and rain swept over the county, which resulted in great loss of property. Many persons were badly injured, but no lives were lost. In Burlingame several buildings were blown down, while at Superior nearly every building was completely demolished.

In August, 1859, the land sales took place in this district. The settlers were generally poor, and without money to pay for their claims. Nearly all had to borrow money, and some disposed of their land at once; in many instances getting but a small portion of its real value. The usual rate of interest was 5 per cent per month, and this with the principal was secured by a mortgage upon their lands. The greater number of those who remained afterward lost their land, it being sold under mortgage, as it was impossible to pay such a rate of interest, much of which had to be compounded every year. There was a poor market for crops, and the savings of the settler were very small.

The great drought of 1860, which extended throughout Kansas, was particularly severe in Osage County. From June, 1859, to November, 1860, there was no rain to afford any nourishment to vegetation. Everything dried up, and there was no crop of any kind raised. The settlers were soon reduced to a suffering condition, and many left the country. Those who remained were only saved from starvation through aid in the form of provisions and clothing sent by the people of more Eastern States. Aid societies were formed, and through them the most of the goods sent in were disbursed. In Osage County, S. R. Caniff, of Burlingame, and O. H. Sheldon, of Superior, were appointed to distribute aid and goods to the needy. Outside contributions were liberal and all were kept from severe suffering, though many privations were endured.

On January 11, 1861, one of the most severe snow storms ever known in the history of the country began. Considerable suffering was endured, but no lives were lost. On a level the snow would measure more than twenty inches in depth, and it drifted so badly that travel was suspended for nearly three weeks. It remained on the ground for twenty-four days, when it disappeared as suddenly as it came, and the streams were filled to overflowing. This was the first wet period for more than a year. Notwithstanding the big storm and the drought of the year before, the stock were in good order in the spring.

The first grasshopper raid was in 1866. On the 15th day of September they appeared in clouds, and beginning to descend it was not long until every green thing was eaten, and all growing crops, completely destroyed. Not only this, but they deposited their eggs by the countless millions. But a small percentage of these hatched out, yet the next spring there were enough to seriously injure the wheat crop. The young corn was damaged, but before June they had flown away, which gave sufficient time to replant corn, wherever it was necessary, and taken all in all good crops were raised.

In the summer of 1874, the grasshoppers again appeared in myriads. It was just at the close of the small grain harvest and little damage was done except to corn and gardens. Late crops of all kinds were utterly destroyed. But little corn was raised. During the following winter times were very hard, and many citizens were compelled to accept aid sent in from Eastern States. Eggs were again deposited, which hatched out in the spring, and the fields of growing grain swarmed with young grasshoppers. The small grain crop was somewhat injured, but the corn crop was good, as the pests had left the country by June 1. Still suffering from the partial failure of the year before, there were probably more privations endured until the crop of 1876 could be gathered, than at any other time since the very early years of the settlement of the country.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION AND ELECTIONS.

During the earlier years of settlement, the citizens of the northern part of Weller County voted at Burlingame, and no objection was made until Superior became a rival town. Being refused a chance to vote, though containing only about thirty voters, Weller County took steps to secure an organization, an act for that purpose being passed by the legislature February 11, 1859, and the name changed to Osage. A commission composed of A. Leonard, A. H. Shurtleff and T. R. Merritt, was appointed to select judges of an election, which was to take place the fourth Monday in March.

The first meeting of the County Commissioners was held April 27, 1859, at Superior. The Board was as follows: V. R. Morrill, M. Rambo, and A. T. Dutton. E. M. Perrin was Clerk, and John Rambo, Deputy

At an election on June 7, J. L. Rooks was elected Judge; D. B. Burdick, Sheriff; and J. Perrill, surveyor.

The first regular election was November 8, 1859, and resulted as follows: J. R. Carrier, Superintendent of Schools; M. Rambo, Judge; C. C. Crumb, Sheriff; A. N. Hulburd, Register of Deeds; W. O. Fisher, Attorney; John Rambo, Clerk; A. T. Dutton, Treasurer; J. P. Perrill, Surveyor; and A. Leonard, Coroner.

On June 7, 1859, delegates to the Wyandotte Constitutional Convention were elected. In Osage County, James M. Winchell was chosen from Superior, and Hiram D. Prescott from Burlingame. At the meeting of the convention, Winchell was chosen its President by a unanimous vote, and by his great ability, gained the respect of the entire body. He was afterward a prominent candidate for the United States Senate. Before coming to Kansas he was a school teacher. He was visionary, but bold and energetic, and always exerted a great influence on his associates. He was an inveterate enemy to Gen. J. H. Lane, and lost no chance to make his feelings known. After the war began, he became Washington correspondent of the New York Times, and soon became reconciled to Lane, after which they were warm friends. He speculated in gold and became rich, but afterward lost all, and retired to Westchester County, New York, where he died a few years since.

In the fall of 1859, a legislature was elected under the Wyandotte Constitution; O. H. Sheldon, H. H. Heberling and S. R. Caniff were chosen as members from what is now Osage County.

On February 23, 1860, an act passed the legislature, cutting off the southern part of Shawnee County, and adding it to Osage, making the dividing line between Townships 13 and 14, where it has since remained unchanged.

On February 27, 1860, another act passed the legislature, perfecting the organization of Osage County, and ordering the Register and Clerk to at once take possession of all records relating to Osage under its new boundaries. At the same time, Philip C. Schuyler, James M. Winchell and O. H. Sheldon were appointed commissioners to locate a permanent county-seat, and then to call an election for the approval of the voters, and also to make arrangements for the erection of public buildings. Should the citizens of the county not approve of the county-seat first established, another place was to be chosen, and another election called. The southern boundary of Osage County was also defined as it now exists, and a special election for the choice of county officers was appointed

The commissioners appointed, located the county-seat at a point about midway between Superior and Burlingame, and named it Prescott.

On March 17, the county was divided into three commissioners' districts, and an election of officers appointed to take place on March 24. At that election J. L. Rooks, John Dodge and George Hall were chosen Commissioners; S. A. Fairchild, Judge; N. G. Densmore, Clerk; L. R. Adams, Register of Deeds; James Stewart, Attorney; D. D. Rooks, Sheriff; George Roberts, Coroner; C. C. Crumb, Treasurer; H. D. Preston, Surveyor; John Perrill, Assessor; and James Brownlee, Superintendent of Schools.

The county-seat election was held April 24, and Prescott rejected; therefore the seat of justice was held at Superior, a portion of the hotel being used as the court house.

The first term of district court for Osage County was held on October 14, 1861, at Superior. R. M. Ruggles was presiding Judge; E. S. Borland, Sheriff; and A. L. Hulburd, Clerk. Previous to the above date, the county was attached to Shawnee for judicial purposes.

In the fall of 1861, and also in 1862, James Rogers was elected to the legislature from Osage County, over his competitor P. C. Schuyler, beating him by six votes the first year, and by only one vote the next time. They were warm friends, both free-soil Democrats, and ran only on their personal popularity.

The Legislature, early in 1861, made provision for another county-seat election. The contest was between several points, neither gaining a victory. Burlingame received the highest number of votes. On January 24, 1862, the first meeting of the County Commissioners was held at that place. Another election was held in April, with the following result: Burlingame, 138 votes; Versailles, 74 votes; and Havana 1 vote. This gave the county-seat to the first named town, where it remained for many years.

COUNTY-SEAT CONTEST.

Burlingame, the county-seat, being located so far from the center of the county, as soon as the Indian reservation was settled, a movement was made to change its location. An election was held October 18, 1870, which resulted as follows: Lyndon, 1,145; Burlingame, 997; and Keithville, 2 votes. The county-seat was declared at the first named place by the Board of Commissioners. The Burlingame people, however, got out an injunction preventing the removal of the county offices and records. Thus began a series of county-seat elections which engendered much bitterness between different sections of the county, which, at times, threatened to seriously retard its progress. On August 6, 1872, another election was held with the following result: Burlingame, 954; Osage City, 456, and Lyndon, 1,042 votes. Neither place receiving a majority of all the votes cast, another election was held on August 20 between the two places receiving the highest number of votes. That election gave Burlingame 1,407 and Lyndon 1,175 votes, and the former was decided to be the county-seat. In response to a petition, another election was ordered to take place on May 25, 1875. Burlingame despairing of retaining the county-seat, secured the laying out of a town on Section 34, Township 15, Range 15 east, near the center of the county, which was called Shireton. At the election Lyndon received 888, Osage City, 791, and Shireton, 785 votes. Neither place receiving a majority of all the votes cast another election was called between the two points receiving the highest number of votes, to take place June 8. Lyndon received 1,131, Osage City, 1,049, and Shireton, 288 votes. As only the two first-named points were considered to be legally in the contest, Lyndon claimed the county-seat. On the other hand as that town did not receive a majority of all the votes cast, Burlingame secured an injunction against the removal of the county records. Pending the decision of the courts, the Sheriff and Treasurer moved their offices to Lyndon, some time in the fall of the year, but were compelled to move back to Burlingame by a mandamus. Upon a decision of the district court in favor of Lyndon, that town again tried to get the records, but another injunction was served, and the case was carried up to the Supreme Court by the Burlingame people. The Lyndon people then determined to get possession by force, and a small body of men was formed, and teams sent to bring away the records, but the citizens of Burlingame, learning that they were coming, formed themselves into and armed band and took possession of the court house. They also sent out scouts to guard the roads. The opposing party stopped a short distance away, and sent out men, one or two at a time, to reconnoiter, but they were all captured by the Burlingame scouts and confined in the jail. Thus ended the first attempt.

The Lyndon people then returned home and soon collected a force of about 400 men, from the southern part of the county, who were armed with all kinds of weapons. This enraged body of men marched upon Burlingame, determined to secure the county records or burn the town. Scouts were sent in advance to investigate, and they found the court house filled with armed men, intent on defending it and retaining the records. There was for a time danger of a battle, both sides having been worked up to crazy fury. At last the cooler among the leaders on each side met and effected a compromise, Burlingame consenting to give up the records, believing this the only way to save the town from being burned.

The first meeting of the County Commissioners at Lyndon was on November 16, 1875. The Supreme Court afterward affirmed the decision of the court below, and the county-seat remained at Lyndon.

But still the vexed question was not regarded as settled, and in response to a petition another election was called to take place March 12, 1878. Lyndon, Osage City and Burlingame were the contesting points. The contest was a bitter one, each town putting forth every effort to secure a victory, and on the day of election great frauds were committed in all parts of the county, but more particularly in the towns mentioned, each of which polled more than twice the number of votes that there were of voters in the township. As a result Lyndon received 1,745, Osage City 5,204, and Burlingame 2,008 votes. This was more than double the number of legal voters in the county. On this election Osage City claimed to be the county-seat, and at first attempted to secure the removal of the county records, but the election frauds were so plain that the courts refused to have anything to do with it, and the matter was finally dropped.

Since the above named election, the county-seat has remained at Lyndon, and though the people have not yet voted to build county buildings, the question is generally regarded as settled.

When the county-seat was at Burlingame, a court house was built there by subscription by the citizens. At Lyndon no court house has been built, and the county officials occupy rooms in different parts of the town, leased by the county. There is a jail at Lyndon, and a substantial poor house, on the poor farm, not far from Burlingame.

The present county officials are: John C. Rankin, Treasurer; C. A. Cottrell, County Clerk; H. W. Jennees, Register of Deeds; J. D. McCabe, Surveyor; Alexander Blake, Probate Judge; R. C. Heiser, County Attorney; A. Cotterman, Clerk of Court; Harry Smith, Sheriff; Calvin Ransom, Coroner; Commissioners, First District, George S. Brock; Second District, H. M. Crum; Third District, A. L. Lanning; H K. McConnell, Superintendent of Schools; Max. Buek, Representative, Forty-fourth District; W. C. Sweezy, Representative, Forty-fifth District.

WAR RECORD.

On the breaking out of the civil war in April, 1861, the citizens of Osage County made arrangements to do what they could to serve their country, and on the 14th of the following May the following men enlisted in the Second Regiment, Kansas Volunteer Infantry:—Robert H. Baird, Samuel Houston, James R. Stewart, Orlando P. Rooks, Reuben F. Playford, William C. Chatfield, Norman Curtis, J. R. Drew, William Y. Drew, Thomas W. Rogers, H. A. Dutton, Silas M. Hills, John Hendry, Howard Schuyler, Charles W. Ryus, Frederick Schuyler, N. T. B. Schuyler, Julius D. Wright, John Rambo, A. W. Boyce, A. W. Baily, Robert A. Bratton, Charles H. Gooder, F. G. Hunter, Abraham Leonard, Fernando Olds and S. T. Shunk. After a campaign in Missouri the regiment was discharged on October 31.

During the war Osage County furnished more than its quota of volunteer soldiers, many of whom particularly distinguished themselves for bravery. No companies did more effective duty than did those from Osage. A great number served in the Eleventh Kansas Regiment. A great many left Osage County to join regiments from other States. Among them were A. U. Perrill and A. A. Hederstrom.

At the time of Price's raid, Gen. Curtis and Gov. Carney called out the Kansas State Militia, and nearly every able-bodied man in Osage County went out. The campaign lasted three weeks, when upon the retreat of Price, the men returned home. The militia from this county composed the Santa Fe Road Battalion, which was commanded by Col. M. M. Murdock.

Among prominent and brave men of the county who were killed or died during the war were:—Dr. S. A. Fairchild who was killed by guerrillas while attending their own sick, E. P. Sheldon, S. F. Shunk, Thomas W. Rogers. Merritt W. Young, William West, Isaac F. Thiers, Joseph E. Cole, John and William Eckenkamp, Madison T. Hughes, Joseph H. Marple, Capt. Silas H. Marple, John C. Rooks, Augustine C. Rosencrantz, Henry Boyle, Capt. D. D. Rooks, George W. McDonald, John Collins, Horace, Loring and Edwin Dutton.

RAILROADS, SCHOOLS, ETC.

At the close of the war with the increased prosperity of the country, movements were soon made to secure a railroad. In September, 1865, bonds were voted to the Lawrence & Emporia Railroad and to the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad. The first named road was never built. To the latter, $100.000 additional bonds were voted in June, 1867, making $150,000 in all. The road was built in 1869, and the bonds issued in September of that year.

In November, 1870, bonds were voted to the Lawrence & Carbondale Railroad, to the amount of $50.000, to which Ridgeway Township in 1872, added $25,000, and the road was completed in due time.

For several years succeeding 1870, many lines of railroads across various parts of the county were projected and bonds voted, but the roads were never built.

On August 12, 1879, bonds were voted to the Manhattan, Alma & Burlingame Railroad, for the amount of $24,000, and the road was completed the next year.

The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad crosses the northern line of the county near the center, and extends in a southwesterly direction across the townships of Ridgeway, Burlingame, Dragoon, Superior, and Barclay, crossing the western boundary of the county about on the north line of Township 18. The stations are Carbondale, Scranton, Burlingame, Peterton, Osage City.

The Lawrence & Southwestern Railroad extends through the extreme northeastern part of the county, connecting with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad at Carbondale.

The Manhattan, Alma & Burlingame Railroad starts from Burlingame, extends a little north of west, and leaves the county about on the south line of Township 14.

The first schools in the northern part of the county, when a part of Shawnee, were established in Burlingame and Ridgeway. The first school in what was first called Osage County was at Superior. From the very first the schools of the county have steadily advanced, keeping pace with the settlement and improvement of the country. No part of the State has better educational advantages than Osage County. The school districts now number 100. Nearly all of these have neat and substantial schoolhouses of frame and stone, and in many of them great attention is given to the beautifying of the grounds by the planting of shade trees. The schools are all in a good condition and are steadily improving. Under an efficient Superintendent of Schools the better class of teachers are fast getting control of the educational interests of the county, crowding out the indolent and inefficient.

Early in the year of 1859, the first agricultural society in the Territory was organized at Burlingame. Of the first officers chosen, Judge P. C. Schuyler was President, and C. R. Pollard, Secretary. Its name was the Burlingame Agricultural and Horticultural Society. Meetings were held each week during the winter and topics relating to crop and fruit growing were discussed. The Society afterwards became the Osage County Agricultural and Horticultural Society, which existed until 1877, when it united with the Burlingame Union Agricultural Society.

STATISTICS OF PROGRESS.

It has been less than a quarter of a century since the organization of the county, but except for short periods, its progress has been continued and uninterrupted.

The first county tax for Osage was levied May 5, 1859, for $450. This was on the 19th of the following November cut down to $400, and one of the commissioners objected to this, thinking it too much. On November 14, 1859, the valuation of property in the county was $59,635; in 1870, the assessed valuation of property was $1,612,747; and in 1878 it was $2,730,968; and in 1882 it was $3,575,291.62. Considering the low rates of assessment, it is reasonable to estimate the real value of all property in the county at fully $10,000,000.

The population of the county in 1860 was 1,113; in 1870, 7,648; and in 1875, 10,966. In 1878 the population was 12,618; and in 1882 it was 20,727.

Besides the coal interests described in another place, the farming and stock-raising resources have developed until in 1882, there were 8,308 acres of winter wheat yielding 190,946 bushels; and 52 acres of spring wheat producing 676 bushels. Exception yields were on the farms of E. A. Edmondson, Dragoon; Henry Rubo, Carbondale; and T. A. Bailey, Lyndon; which produced respectively, 40, 35 and 39½ bushels to the acre. Oats, 6,519 acres, producing 234,684 bushels; corn, 85,467 acres, yielding 3,347,746 bushels. Of millet and Hungarian there were 7,949 acres, producing 20,000 tons. There were 36,253 acres of meadow yielding 54,825 tons of hay. There were of cattle in the county 29,235 head; sheep, 6,591; hogs, 19,901; and of horses and mules, 8,225.

BURLINGAME.

Burlingame is the oldest town in Osage County, and is pleasantly situated on Switzler Creek, all but a small portion of it lying on the west side. The exact location is on the corner of Sections 14, 15, 10 and 11, of Township 15, Range 14 east. The original town was on the corner of the first two above-named sections. Topeka Avenue being the dividing line between them. Caniff's addition joins the original site on the north, and is separated from it by Santa Fe Avenue, which is a section line.

The main portion of the town is on the level valley land, but toward its western limits it rises by a gently sloping hillside, the crest of which is within the limits of the town, and is covered by residences. The principal business street is Santa Fe Avenue, which has on each side a number of magnificent business houses, constructed of brick and stone. Besides these are a large number of substantial frame stores. The residences of the city are generally neat and attractive in appearance, and the grounds about them are in most quarters of the town, finely ornamented with plants, shrubbery, fruit and shade trees, which gives Burlingame a truly charming appearance.

The Atchison, Topeka, & Santa Fe Railroad. extends along the eastern limits of the town, and the Manhattan, Alma, & Burlingame Railroad extends to the westward, both roads, occupying a depot in common, in the eastern part of the city.

For its trade the town depends on the farming community, and that brought in by the various coal mines that are operated in the neighborhood. All branches of business are represented and is in a prosperous condition. It has always been the aim of the citizens to keep the town from growing in advance of the requirements of the country, and so wisely has this been carried out, that there has hardly been a failure in business for many years.

The population of the city is 1,500, and it is made up of an exceptionally moral and law abiding class of citizens.

EARLY HISTORY.

In the spring of 1855, Philip C. Schuyler and Samuel Caniff located claims where Burlingame now is. At that time this land was a portion of the proposed Council City. During the first years of settlement, many town sites were surveyed within a radius of a few miles, and as soon as the Council City site was abandoned in 1856, it was proposed to survey and build up a town on the land of Schuyler and Caniff. These men, sometime during the year, brought in a large steam saw-mill, and erected it near the center of the proposed town. A great deal of business was done at the mill, and soon it began to be regarded as a business center by the settlers in the vicinity. The only store was kept by McDonald and Bothel, in the same place as when the town was known as Council City. The Council House was used as a hotel, and at times as many as seventeen men slept there.

A Congregational Church Society was organized, with Rev. Henry Morrell, as pastor. P. C. Schuyler and A. W. Hoover were elected deacons, and the minister was paid by the American Missionary Society. Religious services were held at the Council House.

In 1857, the town site was surveyed and named Burlingame.

In June 1857, a schoolhouse was built by subscription. It is now used as a stable. The school was taught the next winter by a young man named Clark.

During that year, Rev. William Ingersoll preached a portion of the time, relieving Mr. Morrell. On August 6, the Baptist Church was organised, and Rev. J. B. Taylor, and R. C. Bryant preached occasionally for them. The same year the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized, and Rev. Holliday and G. W. Paddock supplied the pulpit.

During the year 1857, there was considerable improvement made in the town. Levi Empie erected a stone building, that now forms a partof his large block on Santa Fe Avenue, and in the fall he opened a general store.

A. R. and James Bothel erected a small building on Santa Fe Avenue, and opened a store. Henry Smith erected the stone building nearly opposite the present Shepard House. Several frame buildings were erected. I. B. Titus built a toll bridge across Switzler Creek, near where the railroad bridge now is, and charged 25 cents for each wagon passing over it, and owing to the immense freighting business on the Sante Fe trail, he made the enterprise pay well. A corn grist-mill was attached to Schuyler & Caniff's saw-mill.

The name of the post-office was changed to Burlingame, January, 30, 1858.

On February 1, 1858, the Burlingame Town Company was incorporated by an act of the Legislature. The Company was composed of Philip C. Schuyler, Samuel R. Caniff, George Bratton, John Drew, N. P. B. Schuyler, and James Rogers.

On February 18, 1860, Burlingame was granted a charter, and incorporated as a city by an act of the Legislature. Philip C. Schuyler was elected Mayor, and pre-empted the town site for the Company. S. R. Caniff, George Bratton, E. P. Sheldon, and Joseph McDonald were elected members of the Council.

In 1859, a severe storm of wind and rain swept over the town and several buildings were blown down, but no one was seriously injured.

The same year a religious revival was held at night in the woods, and twenty-six persons professed to have experienced religion.

In 1860, the Old Presbyterian Church was organized, A small church was erected, which has since been sold and converted into a dwelling-house.

Up to the year 1860, the town had been steadily improving, but as that was the year of the great drought, everything came to a standstill.

In the spring of 1861, Rev. J. M. Fox removed from Ridgeway, and gathered up the fragments of the Free Presbyterian Church of Burlingame and Superior, and a portion of the Congregational Society, and organized a new Congregational Society.

The county- seat was located at Burlingame the same year.

When the war broke out in 1861, a large number of the citizens of the town and vicinity enlisted in the Union army.

During the year 1862, the citizens built a large round fort where the town well now is, and every summer until the close of the war, a number of armed men were stationed there. This was done to prevent the burning of the town by Bill Anderson, the noted guerrilla. Previous to the war the Andersons lived in Lyon County, but Bill and his brother soon joined Quantrell's guerrilla gang. Bill had been courting a young lady living near Burlingame, on which account her parents were driven from the county by the Union men. Besides this, he had stolen a saddle from a Union soldier, and some Burlingame men had attempted to arrest him. For the above reasons he threatened to destroy the town, and the citizens were in constant fear of a sudden raid by his numerous band, and all possible precautions against a surprise were taken.

During the war the town grew but very slowly, so many of the citizens were in the army, and those at home had to guard against the invasion of the State. But as soon as the war closed the town began to improve rapidly.

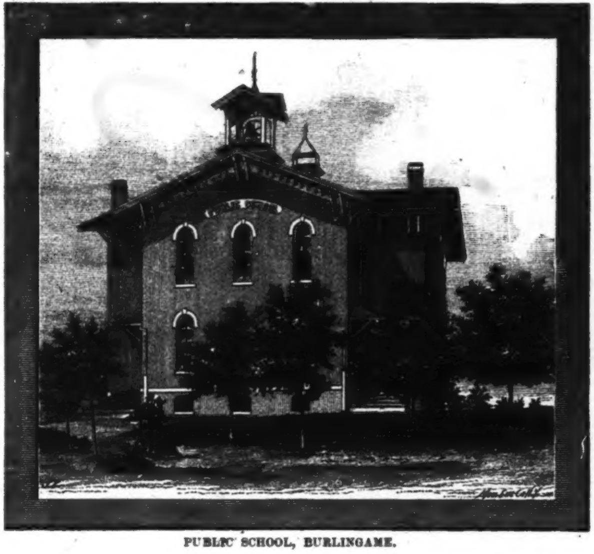
In 1866, a large three-story flouring-mill was built near the old one. The Methodist Church was built the same year.

In the summer of 1866, Abel Polley, one of the earliest settlers, and a very old man, who had been Justice of the Peace for several years, was murdered by a man named Bates. The assassin had escaped from the Johnson county jail, and one night he applied at the farm of A. M. Jarbo for work. He was allowed to remain, but during the night Jarbo detected him stealing some valuables, and trying to get away. He captured the thief, brought him to town and turned him over to John Polley, who was Deputy Sheriff, and a son of Abel Polley. There being no jail he was shackled and left in charge of the old man. Getting hold of a gun he shot Mr. Polley, killing him instantly, and then made his escape. He was soon captured, however, tried, and hung in the court-house on February 20, 1867. This was the only legal execution in the county since its organization.

As soon as the war closed, efforts were made by the citizens to secure the building of a railroad, and as early as September, 1865, bonds were voted for two railroads, one of these being the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, but no line was built until the above-named railroad was completed to this point in the fall of 1869.

During the years 1869 and 1870, Burlingame grew very rapidly, and soon became a town of some magnitude.

For the next ten years it improved slowly but steadily. In 1880, the Manhattan, Alma & Burlingame Railroad was built, and a new impetus was given to the development of the town. Besides this, the coal mines began to be opened and operated about that time, since which improvement has gone on quite rapidly. The population has not increased very fast, but the older frame buildings are giving place to large and expensive ones of brick and stone, and the city with all its various branches of trade, may be said to be in a particularly prosperous condition, with a fine prospect for its future development.



PUBLIC SCHOOL, BURLINGAME.

CITY GOVERNMENT.

From the time Burlingame was first incorporated as a city by the Territorial legislature, in 1860, a city organization was kept up; but it was not until 1870, that it became a city of the third class, under the laws of the State. Everything in the city government has moved on quietly, with no striking events, other than the burning of the City Hall, with the previous records, in 1873. The present city officers are as follows: James Haller, Mayor; Councilmen: George Carroll, Samuel G. Bratton, Robert Huff, James George, Samuel Shibley; Clem. Hardy, Treasurer; W. C. Chatfield, Clerk; S. H. Newman, Police Judge; Isaac Coffmon, Street Commissioner; R. F. Playford, City Attorney; School Board: F. M. Nelson, Chairman; H. W. Filley, Treasurer; George T. Brown, Clerk.

SCHOOLS, CHURCHES, AND THE PRESS.

Among the first things looked to on the foundation of the town, was the establishment of a good school. This has always been well supported by the public spirited citizens. All possible improvements have been made, and now the school has five departments, each in charge of a careful and efficient teacher. The total number of pupils in attendance is 362. The schoolhouse is a large two-story edifice, located on the crest of the hill, in the western part of the town. It was built in 1869, at a cost of $20,000. It is well furnished, and liberally supplied with the necessary apparatus.

The Baptist Church was organized August 6, 1857. The members were: John Drew, Mrs. Sarah Drew, Edward Fish, Mrs. Mary Fish, George I. Drew, Helen Tisdale, Mrs. Lydia A. Playford, Mary Playford, Elizabeth M. Drew, and Mrs. Minerva Titus. During the first year, Rev. Messrs. R. C. Bryant and J. B. Taylor preached occasionally. The question of prospecting for coal in this vicinity was first agitated in 1869, by J. H. Burke and Charles Lyons. Nothing was done, however, until J. E. Rastall, acting with them, started a subscription paper for the purpose of raising a fund for prospecting. Enough money being raised a contract was entered into with Ira Clough, on January 5, 1880. to drill in the old Schuyler well to the depth of one hundred feet When seventy-nine feet deep a twenty inch vein of coal was found. J. E. Rastall leased the property, and attempted to open a mine, but being unable to control the great flow of water, it had to be abandoned. Prospecting was kept up, and now several shafts are in operation. Many difficulties have been in the way for a successful development of this interest. It has been impossible to secure a sufficient number of miners, and as yet the Railroad Company has put in no side switches leading to the mines.

Burke's Coal Mine.—In March, 1880, J H. Burke began sinking a shaft on his land, one mile east of town, and on April 19. a twenty inch vein of coal was found at a depth of 95 feet. Wilson, Andrew Erwin, and Samuel G. Bration. The shaft has a capacity for raising 1,200 bushels of coal per day.

The Mutual Coal Company.—This company has one shaft, one half a mile east of the Fair Grounds. The mine is operated by Organ, Clay & Son.

It has a capacity for raising 1,000 bushels per day, and as soon as fully under way it is proposed to employ thirty miners. The proprietors are Shibley, Canfield & Canfield.

The Burlingame Coal and Mining Company.—Ever after the opening of the coal mines in the vicinity Finch, Lord & Nelson took a leading part in their development. In March, 1882, a joint stock company under the above name, was formed. The officers are E. B. Purcell, President; W. H. Lord, Vice President; J. R. Mulvane, Treasurer; and L. E. Finch, Secretary and General Manager. The capital of the company is $25,000. One hundred hands are employed and about five carloads of coal, per day, are mined.

His parents, Austin and Lucy (Gillett) Finch were natives of Connecticut, from whence they removed in 1830 to Northern Ohio, and settled some thirty-five miles southwest of Cleveland, in Lorain County. They were among the first settlers in that country, and, amidst its dense forests they went to work and opened up one of the finest farms in that State. Their family consisted of five boys and one girl—Henry C., Francis A., Dorwin J., Lucius E., John A., and Delia. Four of these brothers served in the Union army during the war of the Rebellion, and two of them, Dorwin and Francis, were killed in battle just at the close of the war, after having served four years. In 1875 Mr. Finch, with a portion of his family, removed to Burlingame, where they lived several years. In 1880, while on a visit to their friends in Ohio, Mrs. Finch died. Two years afterward Mr Austin Finch again married—this time to Mrs. Rhoda Wilcox, and is now living peaceably and comfortably on the old Wellington homestead. Hon. L. E. Finch, the subject of this sketch, attended the common schools of his native county; took a seminary course in a select school taught by Miss Eliza Hamilton, at Wellington, and entered Oberlin College in his sixteenth year. In 1862, attacked by the war fever that was epidemic throughout the loyal North at that time, he threw aside his studies, enlisted as a private in Company C, Eighty-sixth Ohio Infantry, and donned the accoutrements of a soldier. Shortly after his enlistment he was taken prisoner at Harper's Ferry and paroled. After his exchange he was transferred to the Eighty-seventh Ohio Infantry, and served with that regiment as Color-Sergeant in the Army of the Tennessee two years, when he was mustered out of the service at Cleveland, Ohio, in 1864. After this he engaged in business as a clerk in a Cleveland dry goods store until 1868, when he came to Kansas, locating in the place where he now lives. He was married to Miss Elsie M. Weber, of Bangor, Maine, on the 29th day of February, 1873. At this writing their family consists of four children—Lula B., Cacarora L., Albert H., and Charles S. At this time his Senatorial district is the Twenty-first—consisting of Osage and Wabaunsee counties. His father, Thomas Russell, was a hardy pioneer of abolition ideas and heartily espoused the cause of popular liberty and assisted in bringing many a border ruffian to justice. His house was always a haven of refreshment and rest for Osawatomie Brown, Generals Lane, Leonhardt and others. Mr. Russell senior was appointed Deputy Provost Marshal, but died December 22, 1862, before assuming his duties. Erza is a descendant of the English stock of Lord John Russell, and is a product of Kansas views and liberal ideas; in a word, a self-made man. OSAGE CITY.

Osage City is the metropolis of Osage County, and is pleasantly situated on the level valley lands, on the north side of Salt Creek. The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad passes through the central part of the city from northeast to southwest.

The population of the town within its corporate limits is about 2,500, but adjoining are several tracts, laid off in lots, and occupied by residences, which, though outside the corporation, properly belong to the town, and will swell the population to fully 3,400.

The streets of the city are provided with lamps at each corner, are wide, and are kept in good order. A great many of both the business houses and residences are large structures, neat in design. Along the business streets are many large and costly buildings of brick and stone. All branches of business are carried on, and all are prosperous. The educational and religious institutions are of a very superior order.

The greater part of the town site is on Section 26, Township 16, Range 14 east. The original town site was nearly all on the west side of the railroad. The principal additions, are Wetherell's and Dodd & Boyd's Additions on the east; Dodds' and Dodds & Martin's Additions on the south of the last named; east of which is Rosenberg's Addition. East of Wetherell's Addition is Jennings'. North of the original town is Wetherell's Second Addition.

The first settlement made in the neighborhood of Osage City, was at a point about one and one-half miles west, by E. Kibbe and family, in March, 1865. The next was in June, 1866, by C. S. Martin and family. After that settlement progressed quite slowly until the town was surveyed. There were, however, many farms opened in the vicinity, previous to that time, many of them by Swedes.

Osage City was surveyed and platted late in the year 1869, after the route of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad had been fixed, but before it had been built to that point. T. J. Peter, then superintendent of the Railroad Company, had purchased a large tract of land of John N. Wetherell, and had agreed that a railroad station should be located on the land of the latter. The original town site, west of what is now the business part, was surveyed by the Arkansas Valley Township Company, which was composed generally of officials of the above named railroad. About the same time Wetherell made an addition on the east, and began selling lots, through John F. Dodd, his agent.

Building began at once. The first lumber for the store of Bothel & Ryus, was hauled on December 3, 1869. The store was finished and opened in January, 1870. A little before this John F. Dodd's Hotel, west of the railroad track was finished and opened. It now forms a part of the City Hotel which occupies the same site. Several buildings were commenced during the winter, the second store being that of Drew & Playford, opened in March, 1870. Soon after, John A. Martin opened the first hardware store. In the fall of 1868, a post-office had been established, less than one mile distant from the present Osage City, and was called Onion Creek. Thomas Martin was postmaster. In March, 1870, the name of the office was changed to Osage City, and John F. Dodds was appointed postmaster. The first sermon preached in Osage City, was by C. S. Martin, in February, 1870.

During the year 1870, the town grew quite rapidly. The first regular train of cars passed through in May. John F. Dodds, as agent for the Arkansas Valley Town Company, and for J. M. Wetherell, was very active in the sale of lots, and inducing settlers to locate. The greater number of buildings were erected on Wetherell's Addition, and this has ever since been the business center of the city. In the summer of 1870, the first coal mines were opened by the Osage Carbon, Coal & Mining Company.

In 1870, a large two story brick schoolhouse was erected, which was afterwards blown down, and one story again built up, and now is used as one of the ward schools. The first marriage in the vicinity of Osage City, was that of James H. Kibbe to Hannah Martin, October 13, 1867. The first on the town site was that of Mr. Fowler and Mrs. Griggsby. The first birth was a child to Dr. and Mrs. McCormack. The first death was that of Mrs. Samuel Shaffer.

After the township was surveyed it grew very rapidly for about three years, after which a somewhat dull period was experienced for a few years and during which time it progressed but slowly. As soon as business throughout the country began to revive, the town again began to grow rapidly, and its improvement and development has since progressed steadily.

In June, 1874, the town was visited by a severe wind-storm. The two story brick schoolhouse and the Catholic Church were blown down, the Swedish Church was blown off the foundation, a few barns and small buildings blown down, and several business houses and residences slightly damaged.

During the history of the town there have been but few fires. There have been instances where one or two buildings were destroyed at a time, but not until November 2, 1882, was the town visited by a general conflagration. The fire broke out about four o'clock, on the morning of the above date, on the north side of Market Street, between Fifth and Sixth. It was not long until the half square from the post-office to the railroad track was on fire. The only aid in extinguishing it was a Babcock Extinguisher, and a hose. A large number of men soon gathered, and every effort was made to save the buildings on the opposite side of the street, and the post-office building. This was accomplished only with the greatest difficulty. The buildings on the south side of the street were damaged considerably. The total loss by the fire is estimated at $35,000.

SCHOOLS, CHURCHES, AND THE PRESS.

Before the beginning of Osage City a school district had been formed, and a schoolhouse had been built within a mile from the town site. This was in 1868. In the fall of 1870, the schoolhouse was moved to the new town. E. Mills was the first teacher. The two-story brick schoolhouse was completed soon after. Different departments have been added, until now, including the City Superintendent of Schools, eleven teachers are employed. There are now 1,062 pupils of school age in the district. In the central part of the city is the large two-story brick schoolhouse erected in 1880, at a cost of $20,000, in which eight departments are taught. The other schools are taught in smaller houses in various parts of the city. The school is in a very prosperous condition, each department in charge of a competent teacher. In the high school an academic course of study is pursued.

The City Board of Education is as follows: J. V. Admire, Chairman; E. Mills, Clerk; D. W. Morgan, H. O. Anderson, T. M. Truitt, Asher Adams, T. M. Gruwell, Robert Craig, Sam Slusser, W. H. Scott, J. M. Abbott, Superintendent of Schools.

The Swedenborgian Church was organized in May, 1873, by Rev. Adam Peabody, the State Missionary, with twelve members. The society now numbers twenty-three members, and services are held regularly in the old "Free Press" building.

The press of Osage City has always been kept up to a high standard of excellence, and is well patronized by an appreciative reading public.

The Osage City Free Press was established in August, 1871, by W. H. Morgan and A. B. Cooper. It was then called the Osage City Shaft, but in March, 1875, John P. Campbell purchased it and changed the name to the Free Press. After publishing the paper about a year he sold it to W. H. Morgan, who continued it until March 1, 1881, when it was purchased by the present editor and proprietor, J. V. Admire. This paper is an eight-column folio, and Republican in politics. MINING COMPANIES, BANKS AND HOTELS.

Osage City is the center of the coal fields of the county, and the mining interests being developed makes the city the thriving and busy place it now is. During the first year of the history of the town mining was commenced, and this has developed from year to year until there are now twenty-eight shafts, which when running in full capacity yield 1,600 tons per day, and employ upward of 1,200 men. These figures represent the working capacity in the busiest season. Besides the shafts are a large number of drifts and strippings, which employ many men and teams, and add much to the mining interest of the town.

The Osage Carbon Company succeeded the Osage Carbon, Coal and Mining Company, which was the first to open shafts here. The officers are W. B. Strong, President; E. Wilder, Treasurer; L. Severy, Manager; and Robert Craig, Superintendent. The number of men employed are 600; the number of shafts worked, 12; tonnage mined per day 750.

The Osage City Bank is the oldest established in the city, and was one of the J. S. Danford banks that failed in 1881, causing so great excitement at the time. Osage City is the home of Danford, and those most intimate with his business are still in doubt whether he had lost the depositors' money in imprudent speculation, or that he robbed them of the money and retained it. Heavy losses in reckless speculation was probably the real cause of the failure of all his banks. This bank is still open settling old business, but this is about all that is done.

The Palace Hotel is one of the leading hotels of the city, and is located on the corner of Market and Sixth streets. O. E. McElfresh is the proprietor.

The Osage City Hotel is the oldest established hotel in the city, a portion of it having been built by John F. Dodds in December, 1869. It is now a large house, nearly opposite the depot. W. C. Harding is proprietor.

The Osage City Flouring Mill was built and set in operation in 1871, by Martin & Clemmer. In 1873, C. S. Martin assumed the sole proprietorship, and controlled it a number of years. It is now owned by the Wetherell estate. The mill has four run of burrs, and a good quality of flour is made.

CAPTAIN J. V. ADMIRE, editor of the Osage City Free Press, was born in Johnson County, Ind., October 15, 1842. In 1852 his father, Rev. James B. Admire, then living on a farm near Morgantown, Ind., was admitted to the itinerant ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the Indiana Conference, and appointed to the French Lick Circuit, Dubois County. He continued in the ministry until the summer of 1861, when his death occurred at Yankeetown, Warrick County, Ind., from typhoid fever. Captain Admire's mother died about the same time and from the same disease. The subject of this sketch was practically thrown upon his own resources at an early age, as his father's family was large, and the salary of a "Methodist preacher" at that time was very meagre. Prior to the war, from the time he was sixteen, he engaged in school teaching, though he never adopted teaching as a profession. It was merely a temporary expedient to raise funds to enable him to prosecute his studies. In 1859-60 he attended Delaney Academy, at that time a very prosperous Cumberland Presbyterian institution, located at Newburgh, Ind., and distinguished himself by the delivery of a very radical anti-slavery oration at a public "exhibition" the winter prior to the nomination and election of President Lincoln. August 12, 1862, he enlisted as a private soldier in Company E, Sixty-fifth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, at Newburgh, and upon the organization of that regiment at Camp Lewis, near Evansville, Ind., was appointed to the office of Sergeant, serving as such until June 5, 1863, when, upon the recommendation of Col. John W. Foster, who was the commanding officer of the regiment, he was commissioned by Gov. Oliver P. Morton as Second Lieutenant of his company. March 21, 1864, he was promoted to First Lieutenant, and November 28, 1864, to Captain of his company in which office he served until the "muster out" of his regiment, which occurred at Greensboro, N. C., June 22, 1865, the regiment receiving its final pay and discharge at Indianapolis in July of that year. Captain Admire was on duty with his company and regiment continuously during the whole period of their service, never missing a day's duty on account of sickness or other cause. In the spring of 1863 the regiment was re-organized as mounted infantry, after having spent a few unprofitable months marching up and down the country on foot in pursuit of the well-mounted Rebel guerrillas that infested and overran Southwestern Kentucky in the vicinity of Henderson, Owensboro, Madisonville, Morganfield, and adjacent points. After this, during the summer of 1863, this regiment, aided by Gen. Shackelford's regiment of Kentucky Cavalry, succeeded in capturing and dispersing all the organized bands of guerrillas in that portion of the State, and in the latter part of the summer marched across the Cumberland Mountains, and, with little opposition, entered Knoxville and took possession of East Tennessee, participating afterward in all the troubles incident to the siege of Knoxville by Longstreet, and the leisurely, so-called, retreat of that noted Rebel General into Virginia. In the spring of 1864, at the beginning of the "Atlanta Campaign," the Sixty-fifth was dismounted and assigned to the Third Brigade, Third Division, Twenty-third Army Corps, Army of the Ohio, and participated actively in all the troubles of that noted campaign from beginning to ending. Was in the battles of Franklin and Nashville, after which the Twenty-third Corps was transferred via the Ohio River, Cincinnati, Washington and Annapolis to the mouth of the Cape Fear River—Fort Fisher. Met Gen. Sherman's Army at Goldsboro, N. C., and was at Johnson's surrender at Raleigh. After his return home, Captain Admire, intent upon the completion of his education, entered Asbury University as a student, quitting it, however, at the beginning of his junior year. In 1866, without any previous knowledge of the newspaper business, he commenced the publication of a Republican weekly newspaper at Newburgh, Ind., which he called the Warrick Herald, and continued it for two years, when it was sold to the proprietor of his Democratic local contemporary, and its publication discontinued. September, 1867, he was married to Miss Emma Lewis, of Newburgh, whose father, Dr. Eli Lewis, had served as Surgeon of the Sixty-fifth Indiana Volunteers, and who afterwards removed to Topeka, Kansas, where he died August 1, 1882, after an active and continuous medical practice of over fifty years. Captain Admire came to Kansas in the latter part of July, 1869, and tried farming in Shawnee County for something over two years, when he abandoned that business in great disgust, and bought an interest in the North Topeka Times, of which he was editor and partly and wholly publisher for about a year and a half. He was appointed postmaster of North Topeka in 1874, re-appointed and confirmed by the Senate in 1875, and held the office until May, 1878. In November, 1878, he removed to Osage City, and entered into a law partnership with Hon. Ellis Lewis, having been admitted to the bar in 1867. At the expiration of a year he engaged in other business, and March 1, 1881, he bought the Osage City Free Press, of which he is yet editor and principal owner. He was appointed postmaster of Osage City February 10, 1882, his appointment was confirmed by the Senate on the 17th of the same month, received his commission March 14, and took charge of the office April 1, 1882. He was elected a member of the Board of Education of Osage City April, 1881, and chosen as its President a year afterward. PETERTON.

This town is situated on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad, about three miles north of Osage City. It is exclusively a mining town, and has few business houses. It was laid out by the Osage Carbon Company, and named in honor of T. J. Peter.

The town has a population of about five hundred, consisting almost entirely of miners. The houses are comfortable, and are all frame structures, and owned generally by their occupants. The schoolhouse is quite large, and a good school is taught.

The Osage Carbon Company owns most of the coal fields around Peterton. Here they have two shafts, employing one hundred men, and turning out, in the busy season, about 150 tons of coal per day. They also own several drifts and strippings.

There are also within a short distance, four more shafts, each owned by different firms, which employ a number of men, and are doing a thriving mining business.

LYNDON.

This town is the county seat of Osage County, and is situated on the hillside sloping from the north side of Salt Creek. The location is a short distance southeast from the center of the county, and is a very pleasant one.

Lyndon is a city of the third class, and has a population of about six hundred. There are two hotels, one bank, one flouring mill, two newspapers, three churches, a large two-story schoolhouse, and a number of business houses, which enjoy a good trade in all branches common to a country trade. Many of the buildings in the town are large, substantial and present a fine appearance.

The first settlement on what is now the site of Lyndon, was in April, 1869. The diminished reservation of the Sac and Fox Indians had just been opened for settlement, and M. M. Snow, William Haas, B. G. Hall, and S. C. Gilliland conceived the idea of pre-empting a tract of land here with a view to laying out a town and ultimately to secure the county-seat Each entered a claim of 160 acres, making an entire body of 640 acres, on Section 31, Township 16, Range 16, and on Section 6, Township 17, Range 16.

Soon after removing to their claims M. M. Snow opened a store, where he enjoyed a good trade as the adjoining country was fast being settled.

In the fall of 1869, a post-office was established and called Osage Center. M. M. Snow was appointed postmaster.

It was proposed to lay out a town on forty acres from each of the quarter sections above named, making a town site of 160 acres, but the owners lacked the means to improve the town. The new town was called Osage Center.

Early in the year 1870, N. D. Fairbanks, then living at Burlingame, at the solicitation of the owners of the land, entered into a correspondence with Judge Lawrence D. Bailey, relative to forming a Town Company. A meeting was held, a Town Company formed, with Judge Bailey at its head, and the name Lyndon selected for the proposed town.

On March 7, 1870, the town was surveyed, and it was not long till building commenced on a large scale. There was one grand rush for the new town that was expected so soon to become a city as well as the county-seat. From the very first, lots sold for a high price, and within the first three months, the price was increased until $1,000 was asked for desirable corner lots. By July there were several business houses opened, while others were being built.

By the middle of October there were fully one hundred and twenty buildings, of which about twenty were business houses. There were then two hotels. The population numbered about five hundred.

A county-seat election was held in October and Lyndon declared the county capital, and though the officers were enjoined not to remove the records to the new town, it continued to improve for some time, and additions were made to the old site.

The first birth was in the summer of 1870, and was that of a girl named Lyndon Smith.

The first death was that of Amos A. Gardner, on October 10, 1870.

The first marriage was that of L. D. Gardner and Sarah E. Thomas on January 3, 1871.

The first school was taught in the summer of 1870, by J. M. Watkins, in a house on the hill, in the northwestern part of the town. The first schoolhouse was built in 1870, in the southeastern part of the town, where the new stone house now stands, and the first term of school was taught in the spring of 1871, by Prof. J. S. Whitman and an assistant.

The first sermon was preached in the spring of 1870, by Rev. Mr. Barker, a Baptist minister. The first church was the Methodist Episcopal, built late in the year 1870.

On May 1, 1871, Lyndon became a city of the third class. S. C. Gilliland was elected Mayor, and H. W. Jenness, John S. Edie, William Haas, M. M. Snow, and J. W. Hammond, City Councilmen.

Not securing the county-seat the town soon began to go down, and for a time it looked as if it would be deserted altogether. The value of property depreciated, and a great number of the lots, were sold for taxes and never redeemed. For a time lots could be bought for a trifle, though the same had sold before for a high price. A great many of the houses were moved away, the most of them to be used as farm residences in the neighborhood.

A few only of the business men remained, but these were generally prosperous, even during the most discouraging period, with the exception of the dull years incident to the grasshopper raid of 1874.

When the county offices and records were moved to Lyndon in 1875 that gave but little impetus to the growth of the town, as no one regarded the county-seat contest as settled, and until 1879 but few improvements were made.

The county-seat contests ending in 1878, and Lyndon still holding it, there began to be a much greater confidence in the future prosperity of the town, and the next year improvements began, since which time it has progressed slowly but steadily.

At no time during its history has the town had so good prospects for future success as the present. It is surrounded by a good farming country, settled by a thrifty and enterprising class of farmers, who give the town a good trade, and there are prospects for a railroad before very long, an effort now being made to secure the building of the Nebraska, Topeka, Iola & Memphis Railroad by this route. The citizens are of an enterprising class, with a stability calculated to work for the best interests of the town.

LOCAL MATTERS.

The city government is in a thriving condition. The following are the city officers: J. W. Keenan, Mayor; C. Ransom, Police Judge; G. W. Morris, Clerk; J. Worth, Street Commissioner. Councilmen: E. Olcott, J. H. Stavely, J. H. Howe, C. F. Bixby and J. M. Barnes.

The citizens of Lyndon are moral, and the cause of religion has always kept pace with the improvement of the town. All religious enterprises are liberally supported, and a large percentage of the people are church members.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1870. It was then attached to the Quenemo circuit. Rev. Jesse Wilkins preached for a few weeks, when he was succeeded by Rev. Mr. Harding, of Melvern. A small church, costing about $700, was built the same year. Mrs. Uber and Mrs. Hall were particularly active in raising this money. The first regular pastor was Rev. O. H. Call, appointed in 1871. The society has continued to prosper, and now has a church costing $3,000, completed in 1882. The society now has 110 members. Rev. G. W. Browning is pastor.

The Presbyterian Church was organized at Averill's Hall, in December, 1870, by Rev. John Rankin. The members were: Robert W. Anderson, Rebecca Fish, Jacob Hoke, Mrs. Martha Hoke, Mrs. Mary E. Morris, Mrs. M. Milner, O. S. Pine, Mrs. Jane Rankin, Thomas L. Rankin, Mrs. Charlotte Rankin, J. H. Smith, Annie W. Smith, Silas B. Tower, Pamelia L. Tyler, and Thomas M. Wallace. The first elders were: R. W. Anderson and O. S. Pine. Rev. W. W. Curtis, of New York, took charge of the church in March, 1871, and on the 24th of the same month the church was reorganized. In 1874 the church building was erected, at a cost of $3,000. The society now numbers forty-eight members. Rev. Morgan Williams is the pastor.

The United Presbyterian Church was organized in May, 1872, by Rev. E. C. Cook. The church building was erected in 1881, at a cost of $1,100. Rev. Samuel Alexander is the pastor. He assumed charge June 27, 1882, and was the first regular minister. The church now has thirty members.

From the beginning of the history of the town, its educational interests have been encouraged and liberally supported. It has always had one of the best schools in the county. There are now only two departments, but it is proposed to soon add another. The old schoolhouse being too small, another is building. It is of stone, 40x60 feet in dimension, two stories high, and will contain four large classrooms, besides the necessary smaller ones, and will, when complete and furnished, cost about $7,000.

Since the foundation of the town the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Independent Order of Good Templars have had an organization, but have since suspended. The remaining lodges are named below.

Valley Brook Lodge, No. 2,012, K. of H., was instituted January 13, 1880. Monroe Pettigrew was Dictator; E. A. Barrett (since deceased), Reporter; J. S. Whitman, Financial Reporter; and P. L. West, Treasurer. The other charter members were: W. W. Morris, J. M. Moran, L. D. Gardner, J. H. Johnson, W. W. Bodine, W. H. Riddle, James Smith, Joseph Lewis and George Braun. The lodge has now seventeen members, and is in a prosperous condition.

Euclid Lodge, No. 101, A., F. & A. M., was instituted in 1871, with S. C. Gilliland W. M. It has ever since kept up an organization, and is in a prosperous condition.

Lyndon Post, No. 19, G. A. R., was organized in December, 1880, with eleven members. J. H. Sowell was Post Commander, and J. T. Underwood Adjutant. The Post is in a flourishing condition, and has forty-one members.

The Lyndon Cornet Band is composed of thirteen pieces, with the following officers: James Bain, Leader; E. A. Atwell, President; W. S. Olcott, Vice-President; H. S. Whitman, Treasurer; and R. A. Miller, Secretary.

The newspaper history begins with the establishment of the Lyndon Signal, March 8, 1870. L. J. Perry published the first number, at Ottawa, and was then succeeded by J. J. Johnson, who published it at Lyndon for some time, when he was succeeded by G. B. Jenness. It existed only about a year. The Osage County Observer was established in December, 1872, by C. R. Bentley and Peter Kirby, who sold it to George Hoover, who continued its publication but a short time. The Osage County Sentinel was started in March, 1873, by L. D. Bailey, but in a short time it was discontinued. The Lyndon Times was established on October 15, 1874, by R. A. Miller and Theodore Whitted, but it existed only for a short time when it suspended. It was re-established by R. A. and W. F. Miller, September 30, 1875. The name was changed to the Lyndon Journal on February 9, 1882, and still continues under that name. It is a seven-column folio paper, Republican in politics. The Lyndon Leader was established January 1, 1881. J. H. Stavely is editor and proprietor. The paper is a six-column quarto, is Republican in politics, and is ably conducted.

The Lyndon Savings Bank began operations early in the year 1883. O. C. Williams is President; J. H. Stavely, Vice-President; and W. A. Madaris, Cashier. The capital stock is $50,000. A general banking and collection business is done.

The Lyndon Flouring Mill is a steam mill, kept in constant operation, and turns out a large quantity of excellent flour. The mill was moved from Franklin County in 1873. The citizens donated five acres of land, built a good stone foundation, and moved the mill for the owners free of charge. After that time the property changed hands several times, but is now owned by C. F. Bixby & Bro.

The town is located in the center of the coal belt of the county, and mining is the principal industry. Though only about ten years old, Scranton is one of the most thriving towns in the county, and all branches of trade, necessary in a farming and mining country, are carried on. On September 27, 1871, Alex. Thomas, and O. H. Sheldon began sinking a coal shaft. This was completed in 1872, and mining was soon commenced. That year, Porter Sheldon joined in the enterprise, and the Burlingame and Scranton Coal Company was formed by the Sheldons, and a town surveyed late in the summer and called Scranton, from the town of that name in Pennsylvania. A few houses for the miners were built, and a store was opened. The entire business was superintended by Alex. Thomas. A post-office was established and A. Thomas appointed postmaster. For the first three years of its history there was little business done in the town, except by the above named Company. In 1875, the coal interests began to be developed to a greater extent, and as a consequence the town began to improve. Henry Isaacs opened his coal mines that year, and about the same time the Carbon Coal Company, and Chappell & Edwards began sinking shafts, and were followed the next year by Joseph Drake.

The first marriage was that of David Williams and Mrs. Rebecca Stull, which took place in 1873. The first sermon ever preached on the town site, was in April, 1872, by Rev. J. W. Stogdill of Burlingame, and at the Coal Company's boarding house. The schoolhouse was built in 1872, and the first term of school was taught the same year, by H. D. Porter of Burlingame. The schoolhouse was located on the northwest part of the original town site, and where the large two story schoolhouse now is.

The first birth in Scranton, was that of Madison Evans, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Evans, in August, 1872. He died December, 1873. This was the first death in the town.

After the town began to improve in 1875, it grew slowly until 1879, when the mines having been opened up, there was a rush of capital and settlers to the new town. So great was it that by June, 1880, the population numbered 930. Since that time the number of inhabitants has increased to nearly 1,700, and the town is steadily improving. Since the original town was surveyed, four additions have been made. Throop's Addition was first made on the west side of the original town site, and this is now the business portion of the town. Next was an addition by the Carbon Coal & Mining Company; then an addition, a short distance to the south, by the Osage Carbon Company, which is composed of about seventy-five miners' houses; and still later there has been Sheldon's Addition.

ARVONIA.

This is a thriving little town with a population of about 150. It is pleasantly situated on the level valley lands, south of the Marais des Cygnes River, and west of Coal Creek, on the south half of Section 16, Township 18, Range 14 east. It has three stores, one hotel, one blacksmith and wagon shop, a post-office, two churches and a schoolhouse. Its citizens are intelligent and enterprising. Though small, the village has always been a thriving one. Arvonia was surveyed and platted in 1869, by a company of Welsh people who had formed a colony, with J. Mather Jones as their leader, and formed a settlement at and around the town site. Among the leading men of the colony were J. A. Whitaker, of Chicago, a partner of Jones, John Rees, John Nai Jones, L. Humphrey, Evan Evans, David Lloyd Davis, and Rev. J. M. Barrows. The village soon grew to fully its present size. A few stores were opened, the first being one for the sale of general merchandise by A. Humphrey, and a hardware store by Burton & Johnson. A school was opened in a private house; religious services were held regularly, and a steam saw-mill was erected on the river north of the village. A post-office was established, and A. Humphrey appointed postmaster. Early in the history of the village, a large schoolhouse was erected, and the first term of school taught therein by Mrs. Lavina Cottrell.

When the town was started, it was supposed that a railroad would soon be built up the Marais des Cygnes valley, and when this failed, a few of the leaders, who had expected a large town to spring up, became disheartened and left the country. Among these were J. Mather Jones, and J. A. Whitaker, who had invested largely in property, expecting it to rapidly increase in value. The mill was also abandoned. The town is in an excellent location being surrounded by a thrifty class of farmers. Not far from the village are several cheese factories, and a great deal of attention is given to the dairy business. North of the town site a large bridge spans the river.

Churches. There are three church organizations: The Welsh Congregational, Welsh Calvinistic Methodist, and a Congregational Church, composed of Americans. The first two named societies have neat and substantial houses of worship.

MELVERN.

Melvern is situated on a broad and level plateau, on the south side of the Marais des Cygnes River, between it and Long Creek, with the level bottom lands of these streams coming up to the town site on three sides. The town has a population of about two hundred, contains a few business houses, all of which enjoy a good trade, as this is in the midst of a fertile and well settled agricultural country. The first settlement in the vicinity of Melvern was that of Timothy Newton and Maj. E. C. Newton, who located with their families, at the confluence of the Long and Kedron creeks, on August 19, 1868. Within a few weeks they were followed by William Phillips, Jonathan Smith with his two sons, Caleb and Sylvester. These all located before the land was vacated by the Indians. Among those to locate claims early in 1869, were William Harriman, James Decker, S. C. Gilliland, S. B. Enderton, Henry Judd, J. Duffield, Charles Judd and George Francis. As soon as the land was vacated by the Indians, the township was settled rapidly. In the summer of 1870, it was decided to lay out a town. Therefore a Town Company was formed, consisting of S. B. Enderton, Charles Cochran, J. P. Ball. L. F. Warner, J. W. Beck, J. F. Want, J. M. Woods, and Alex. Blake, and a town site was surveyed on the corner of Sections 3, 9 and 10, Township 18, Range 16 east. The name was selected by Charles Cochran, for the reason that his birthplace was at Malvern Hills, Scotland. As soon as strated the town began to grow quite fast, on account of the rapid settlement of the township and the fact that a railroad was expected to be built soon, up the Marais des Cygnes valley.

Some First Things. The first birth was that of Thomas M., son of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Beck, in 1870. The first marriage was that of O. B. Hastings and Cecilia Wallace. The first death was that of Mary A. Huffman.

The first school was taught in 1870, by Miss Anna Want, in Oscar Beck's loghouse. The schoolhouse was not erected until about two years after. It is two stories high and built of stone. The first sermon was preached in Wilson's Grove, before the survey of the town, by Rev. William Robertson. The post-office was established in 1870, and J. W. Beck appointed postmaster. In 1871, a flouring-mill was built by Asher Smith, on the river, on the northern limits of the town. The first store was opened in 1870, by Cochran & Warner. The first and only suicide was that of Miss Mattie Knight, in May, 1881.

Later History. During its earlier history, the town grew to nearly its present size, when failing to secure a railroad, it suddenly came to a standstill, and improved but little until 1882, when a few more buildings, including a Methodist Episcopal Church, were erected.

Churches. During the earliest years of settlement, church societies were organized, and have since been kept up, though only one church has been built. The church societies are the Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal, Baptist and Advents. Just outside the limits of the town are two iron wagon bridges, one built in 1878, across the Marais des Cygnes; the other in 1881, across Long Creek. The first is a one hundred feet span, the other, ninety feet.

Cyclone. June 12, 1881, a terrible cyclone swept down the north side of the Marais des Cygnes River. It was a half mile in width, and leveled every thing in its path. Besides the great damage to crops and buildings, John Harper and David C. Rosencrantz were killed.

QUENEMO.

Quenemo is a little town with a population of about one hundred and fifty, pleasantly located in the wide valley of Marais des Cygnes River, in the southeastern part of the county. It contains but a few houses, yet a good business is done, and with prospects for a railroad, which has already been surveyed, its location is a favorable one for a prosperous town.

The town is the site of the Sac and Fox Indian Agency, and several white traders were there at an early day.

In 1862, about 4,000 Indians of the tribes of Chickasaws, Choctaws, Creeks, Cherokees, and Kickapoos, from the Indian Territory, who were driven out on account of their loyalty to the United States Government, located around the agency, which made trade exceedingly brisk for the few merchants located there. Among them was Perry Fuller. E. Olcott was bookkeeper, Gov. Anderson was gunsmith, H. Huggins was government blacksmith, E. B. Fenn was physician, N. S. Brian was superintendent of the boarding house, Mrs. Craig was the school teacher, and Rev. R. P. Duvall was the missionary.

In 1869, as soon as the reservation was opened for settlement, a large number of men located claims around the agency. Among those who opened stores were William Whistler, and John C. and Alexander Rankin, Rev. Jesse Wilkins located as pastor for the Methodist Church Society which organized at once.

In 1870, a town was laid out and named Quenemo, to which name the post office was then changed. With settlement fast pouring in, the town started with excellent prospects, and it was expected soon to become a city.

Preparations were soon made to build a railroad. Among the hard workers for this were Dr. Alfred Wiley, Warner Craig who was a merchant there, John C. Rankin, and William Whistler. Though a railroad was expected at once, the project fell through, and the town is still destitute of those advantages.

Though started with such bright prospects, misfortunes soon overtook the new town. William Whistler died, Rankin Bros. moved away, and Warner Craig failed in business. After this the town began to decline quite rapidly, though a few houses were left.

In August, 1878, a prairie fire swept over the town, destroying nearly all that remained. After this but little was done for some time, but for the past two years the village has been building up quite rapidly, and with its excellent location, prospects are good for its future prosperity.

BARCLAY.

This is a station on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, and is about six miles southwest from Osage City. The town contains about twenty houses and has a population of about one hundred.

In the center of a rich farming country, quite an extensive business is done, though it is all a local trade. It is also within the coal belt of the county, and when the mining interests of the locality becomes developed, it seems that Barclay is destined to become as prosperous a town as most others of the county.

The town is the center of a Quaker settlement; formed through the labors of John M. Wetherell, who was a member of the sect. After he had sold his large tract of land about Osage City, to T. J. Peter, he conceived the idea of forming a large settlement of his own people around Barclay. Quite a large number of them located, bought land, and began farming. Several of them became discouraged during the hard times and left the country, but those who remained have been very prosperous and are fast becoming wealthy.

Though at Barclay no coal mines have yet been opened, there are shafts on either side of the town, and it is only a question of a short time as to when this great interest will be developed here.

OLIVET.

The town site of Olivet includes all of Sections 3 and 10, and eighty acres of Section 4, Township 18, and Range 15 east. It is divided nearly in the middle by the Marais des Cygnes River; which flows from west to east. The site was located in 1869, by Rev. A. J. Bartels, a minister of the New Church—Swedenborgian—J. R. Elder and C. P. Loricke, they representing a company of shareholders, who had raised a fund of $10,000 in 1868, for the purpose of founding a town somewhere in Kansas.

After the survey, about one-third ot the lots were reserved as a dower for a college, and the remainder was all sold at public sale, on May 1, the proceeds paying a small dividend to the shareholders. A quarter section of land near Arvonia had been purchased by the committee, and was sold to a member of the Company, who donated it to the College Association. Only a few of the buyers settled at once. Among the first settlers were Rev. A. J. Bartels, J. R. Elder, C. P. Loricke, Frank Hindman, James Dickson, Dr. T. B. Haslam, William Haslam, George Phinney, J. Q. Sook, L. W. Powell, P. Hesler, H. J. Davis.

In 1869, Olivet was incorporated as a city of the third class. William Haslam opened a general merchandise and drug store, and later H. J. Davis opened a hotel, Bartels & Munger started a saw-mill. Wagon and blacksmith shops, etc., were started.

In 1870, Dr. W. C. Sweezey opened a store. T. B. Haslam opened a broker's and exchange office, and some other business enterprises were started.

Early in 1870, city bonds to the amount of $10,000 were voted to aid in the erection of a flouring-mill. Of this, $3,000 were issued, after which it was abandoned as a public enterprise, but was completed on a smaller scale by Bartels & Munger.

At the time of the first settlement, the nearest post-office was at Burlingame, twenty miles distant, and William Haslam would have the mail for the neighbors brought over to his store whenever an opportunity occurred. In 1870, he was appointed postmaster, and Olivet made a post-office on a new mail route.

It was expected that a railroad would soon be built up the Marais des Cygnes Valley from Ottawa to Emporia, and when the project failed the new town began to decline at once, and many of the settlers left the country. The only business houses left are Sweezy's store, where is kept a small stock of drugs, and a cooper shop operated a part of the year.

In 1873, a fire swept over the town, destroying two unoccupied residences, a few stables, and a great deal of grain, and hay, and then more settlers left the neighborhood.

The population of the village was once about 300, but now numbers but a few families, and the town site is covered with farms. Several of the original buildings are yet standing. It was proposed by the founders of the town to build a college and make Olivet the headquarters for the Swedenborgians of the entire West.

CARBONDALE.

At this point the line of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, extends in a direction nearly north and south, down the center of a narrow but level valley. Here the town of Carbondale is located, with the business portion of the level land, while the residence part of the city extends far back over the gently sloping hills on both sides of the railroad.

The buildings are generally neat and substantial frame structures, though these are fast giving place to large edifices of brick and stone, of which there are already several.

The town is an excellent point for business. All branches of trade are well represented, and in a prosperous condition, made so by the fact that the city is surrounded by a well developed agricultural country. Besides this there are a large number of coal mines in operation all around the town, which contribute particularly to its support.

In the spring of 1869, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad was completed to this point, and a switch built out for about three-quarters of a mile from the main track, to the coal fields on the farm of J. F. Dodds. Here the railroad received its coal supplies. Coal had been discovered here some years, but only used by those in the immediate vicinity.

Preparations were soon made to open the coal mines on an extended scale, and to build up a town. Therefore a town company was formed, composed of T. J. Peter, then General Superintendent of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company, J. F. Dodds, C. P. Dodds, and L. R. Adams, and a town was laid out on the southeast quarter of Section 24, Township 14, Range 15 east. Soon afterward an addition was made on the north side by William Brown. Main Street passes between these divisions. Some time afterward an addition was made on the west side of the railroad by the Lawrence and Topeka Coal Company.

The first buildings were erected by the Carbon Coal Company. They consisted of houses for the miners, and a store was erected where groceries, meats and provisions were sold.

A post-office was established, and C. P. Dodds appointed postmaster. He was also the railroad agent.

Early in 1870, C. P. Dodds, opened an opposition store, where he had a heavy trade. During the year the town progressed rapidly. E. H. Moore opened a drug store. Dr. C. C. Moore, and Dr. T. M. McClasky located about that time. The first lumber-yard was opened the same year by Klapp & Hilliard, who also built a large store with a hall above. Several other business houses were erected.

In the fall of 1870, bonds were voted to the Lawrence & Carbondale Railroad. Dr. C. C. Moore was the first president of the road, and was instrumental in securing bonds from the county, and from Ridgeway Township. The road was completed and put in operation in 1872. For about three years it did a good business, but the coal business decreasing, the road was abandoned, and preparations made to tear up the track. This was prevented by the citizens, who, under the lead of S. B. Bradford, secured an injunction. Some time afterward the road was again put in operation, and regular trains have since been run, though the line of road is hardly long enough to furnish a paying business.

For several years after the foundation of the town it grew rapidly, and was very prosperous, depending on the mining interests generally for support. This period of prosperity was followed by a few years of depression in business, in consequence of the Osage Carbon Company who operated most of the mines, transferring the heaviest of their mining operations to Osage City; yet during this dull period the town improved slowly, some of the mines being in continual operation.

After the dull season, the old mines were nearly all opened, with many new ones, since which time the city has continued to improve, until the population, including those living at Carbon Hill, the base of operations for the Kansas Carbon Company, and adjoining the Carbondale town site, will number fully fifteen hundred.

The town is now one of the most prosperous ones of the county, and constant improvements are being made. The population is made up of all nationalities. The morals of the people are generally good, although there are occasional affrays among the rougher of the floating class of coal miners.

Other than the rapid development of the town there have been but few events of historical interest. The most startling occurrence was the burning of a shaft in W. L. Green's coal mines, in which nine men lost their lives. This occurred May 6, 1881. The mine was thirty-five feet deep, and the shaft built of planks. To one side of this was an air ventilator, at the base of which a fire was kept burning to create a draft. There being indications of damp, a boy was instructed to keep a good fire. The soot took fire in the flue, and soon the shaft was on fire. The boy saw it and called a man who tore off a board to get at the fire, but this created so much of a draft that the shaft was soon in flames, which prevented the escape of the men. From the outside salt and water was poured down, but it was two hours before it was safe to go down. Superintendent Raby and others went down, and at last brought up all but three. All were nearly suffocated, and three were dead. Those remaining had been ascertained to be dead, and the damp had become so bad that it was decided to leave them, when three men from Scranton, hoping to save them went down with a guide, but only the latter returned. The names of the dead were Michael Mullen, Sr., Michael Mullen, Jr., J. P. Hungate, Charles Jones, A. Warner, J. McDonald, George Evans, A. Benedict, and N. McGonigal. The three last named were from Scranton.

The educational interests of the town have always been maintained, and kept up to a high standard. Before the town was established a school district had been formed, and for the first two years school was taught in the schoolhouse outside the limits of the town. In 1872 a large two-story stone schoolhouse was built at a cost of $8,000. A. V. Sparhawk was the first as well as the present Principal. An addition was built in 1882. When complete, the cost of the entire building will be $10,000. The number of departments in the school are five, each presided over by an efficient teacher.

The coal fields surround the town on all sides, and besides the numerous shafts, an extensive business is carried on in strippings, drifts and slopes. There are probably as many as fifty locations where coal is dug, without shafts having been sunk. Many of the leading merchants of the town own coal fields. During the winter a large number of men are employed in these fields, outside the regular mines.

The greater number of the mines are owned and operated by the Kansas Carbon Company, who own eight shafts on Carbon Hill, just east of the townsite. The first shaft was sunk in 1869. Here in the busiest season about 400 men are employed. The average shipments are thirty carloads per day. Besides the above shafts the company has two near Scranton.

Besides the shafts belonging to the Kansas Carbon Company are others, owned by O'Donnell & Edgar, Richard Byrne, Thomas Trotter and George Robinson, each in continual operation.

From the earliest foundation of the town religious societies have had an organization, and are liberally supported.

FORD COUNTY.

FORD County is the southwesternmost organized county of Kansas, embracing Townships 25, 26, 27, 28 and 29 of Ranges 21, 22, 23, 24, 25 and 26, being thirty miles from north to south and thirty-six miles from east to west, possessing an area of 1,080 square miles.

The country is comparatively level, 20 per cent of the land, being bottom land,—which along the Arkansas has an average width of fifteen miles; the upland is 80 per cent, and but a small portion of it is bluffy. Good building stone is found in the county contiguous to Fort Dodge, and near Spearville is found good sand and a good quality of limestone. The county is well watered, the Arkansas River flowing forty miles through the county, and other smaller streams coursing through it in various directions. The most important of these are Mulberry, Five-Mile, Kiowa, Spring and Crooked creeks. Timber is very scanty: what there is, is mostly cottonwood and box elder. These kinds are mostly grown on the timber claims. The county was named for Col. James H. Ford, of the Second Colorado Cavalry.

ORGANIZATION AND COUNTY OFFICERS.

House, was James Hanrahan in the session of 1874; Robert M. Wright, in 1875, 1877, 1879 and 1881; D. M. Frost, in 1876; G. M. Hoover, in 1883.

Ford County was at first the One Hundred and Third Representative District; by the Legislative apportionment of 1876, it became the One Hundred and Twenty-second; by that of 1881, it was the One Hundred and Eighteenth District. It is the southwest organized county of the Thirty-fifth Senatorial District which elects a Senator in 1884. The district embraces the organized counties of Barber, Pratt, Stafford, Pawnee, Edwards, Ford, Hodgeman and Ness, and the unorganized counties of Lane, Scott, Wichita, Greeley, Hamilton, Kearney, Sequoyah, Gray, Arapahoe, Grant, Stanton, Kansas, Stevens, Seward, Meade, Clark and Comanche, making in all twenty-five counties, nearly one-fourth of the area of the State.

Statistics.—Ford County is in the Arkansas Valley Land District, the office of which is located at Larned, Pawnee County; Charles A. Morris, Register; Henry Booth, Receiver. It has 31,300 acres of public land, 322,560 acres of Osage Indian Trust lands, 91,917 acres of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad lands, the average price of which per acre is $3.25. In 1874, there were 120,061 taxable acres; under cultivation, 95; value of the crop, $230. The people were short of breadstuffs; they had a surplus of buffalo meat. No fall wheat was sown for fear of the grasshoppers and drought. Though there were 35 families, numbering 150 persons, who might require assistance, it was reported that they would get along if "buffaloes remain and Indians stay away." In that event, said Mr. Isaac Young, "We are a free and happy people."

In 1874, there were 82 acres in sod corn; 8, in Irish potatoes; 5, in oats. The following table shows the acreage of different products for a series of years subsequent to 1874.

Red May and Turkey are the kinds of wheat successfully raised. Nearly all of the county is open range. Cost of grazing for the season is 25 cents per head; prairie hay in stack, $5 per ton; herd law in force; cattle feed on buffalo grass nine months of the year. Sheep-raising is confined to the sheep men with large flocks.

FORT DODGE.

Colonel Henry Dodge of the United States Army, left Fort Leavenworth, May 29, 1835, on an expedition to the Rocky Mountains. He followed the west bank of the Missouri, nearly to the mouth of the Platte, and followed it to its source. He then went south to the head waters of the Arkansas, and returning through its valley located a fort on the north side of the Arkansas, which was named Dodge, and is located some four miles below where Dodge City is now located. It has the finest military garrison on the frontier; the buildings are in excellent condition, having ample room for several regiments of soldiers, and in proximity to it is a large military reservation of upwards of 30,000 acres, which is regarded as a first-class place for a Soldiers' Home. Hon. Preston B. Plumb, of the United States Senate, has introduced a bill in the Senate for the establishment of a Soldiers' Home in Kansas, and Hon. G. M. Hoover, the Representative from Ford County to the State Legislature, has introduced a concurrent resolution in the House, asking that it be established at Fort Dodge.

DODGE CITY.

In August, 1872, buffalo hunters and business men in various branches of industry, were attracted to this place. Buffalo hides were extensively shipped from here, and the hunters here obtained their supplies. In some three years this became the objective point for the Texas cattle trade; the cowboys from the Plains driving in here large quantities for shipment. In 1880, about 300,000 head of cattle were sold to the ranches south and west; 60,000 sheep, in flocks ranging from 200 to 2,000.

In the early history of the place, there were more or less of occurrences that savored of a border civilization, and repelled therefrom settlers of æsthetic tendencies and of high culture. But the gradual changes that have occurred, make this a point with many things desirable about it for a permanent home. Illustrative of its earlier civilization is the following resolution, adopted by the Ford County Commissioners in session May 18, 1874:

> Resolved, by the board, that the following resolution be adopted: That any person who is not engaged in any legitimate business, and any person under influence of intoxicating drinks, and any person who has ever borne arms against the Government of the United States, who shall be found within the limits of the town of Dodge City, bearing on his person a pistol, bowie knife, dirk, or other deadly weapon, shall be subject to arrest upon charge of misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $100, or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding three months, or both, at the discretion of the court, and same to take effect on date.

This might provoke an inquiry whether legal transcendentalism had here its culmination, but nine years later, the pistol and the bowie knife have given way to more humane symbols of civilization, and while Dodge City has a full quota of liquor saloons, it has a neat temple of justice, a good school building, church edifices, good newspapers, and a courteous, earnest, and progressive element in its society. Its population is just about 1,000. H. J. Fringer was the first postmaster; Lloyd Shinn, one of the most estimable citizens of the State, died while holding the office, in December, 1882, and Nicholas B. Klaine is his successor. The Bank of Dodge City was established in 1882, with a capital stock of $50,000. G. M. Hoover is President; R. W. Evans, Cashier; H. J. Fringer, Assistant Cashier. Its correspondents are the Bank of Kansas City, the Continental Bank of St. Louis, Donnell, Lawson & Simpson, New York. Its hotels are the Dodge House, City Hotel, Grand Central, Wright House, Iowa House, and South Side Hotel. The Dodge City Flouring Mills, O. Marsh & Co., proprietors, are very well fitted to supply the surrounding country with the choicest of flour.

The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company are building at Dodge City, a station 24x80 feet, 24 feet high, two-stories, bay windows. It will contain the ticket, telegraph and freight offices, with rooms in the upper story for the agents to reside in. The platform will be some 300 feet in length. Two roundhouses with 26 stalls each, are to be erected. The ground is laid out for the building of a machine shop in the center and south of the roundhouses. Material stands in front of the machine shop site for three turn tables, one for each roundhouse, and one to be in front of the machine shop. Work is being done on the elevated track for the new coal chute, which when built will be the largest on the road. When completed, the stock-yards will be over two miles long, and by railroad men is known as a double yard. There will be five switches on the south side of the main track; four on the north side, making working facilities for four switch engines, if necessary. All of the low land is so graded that the many acres occupied by the yards are as level as a hall floor. Each compartment of the stock-yards has its own lock and key. The pens are all provided with water tanks and feed boxes. Hoybin's patent stock chute will be used in loading the stock. The sheep pens are well laid out on the north side.

The site of the Ford County court house is a beautiful one, standing on the rise north from Broadway, where the beautiful valley of the Arkansas is seen for miles east and west of the city. The court room is the upper story, and the basement is the jail. It is a brick structure, and cost about $8,000. It was completed in the summer of 1876. The old Toll House became the Ford County Poorhouse in the winter of 1874. February 10, 1874, bridge bonds were voted by a vote of 111 to 41; current expenses bonds by a vote of 119 to 33.

Prior to April 15, 1875, Ford County paid for rent of buildings for use of the county, $75 per month. A reduction was then made to $50 per month, which price obtained the completion and occupation of the court house. Shawnee and Reno counties boarded Ford County prisoners before the jail was occupied at large.

CHURCHES AND SOCIETIES.

Schools.—The counties of Clark, Meade, Gray and Sequoyah have edcational matters cared for in the organized county of Ford. The average pay per month of male teachers is $41.65; of female teachers, $32.40; persons of school age in 1879 were 439. In 1880 it was 5 3; in 1882 it was 1,002. The Dodge City school had an enrollment of 284 pupils for December, 1882. The number of persons of school age in the district was 450. Five teachers are employed; the principal, John Groendyke, has $65 per month; the four female teachers have an average of $41 per month. The school building is a neat, roomy structure in the southwest part of the city, built of brick. John Whitaker is President, John Groendyke Secretary of the Ford County Teachers' Association.

Churches.—There are Baptist, Methodist Episcopal, Protestant Episcopal, and Catholic organizations at Dodge. The Presbyterians have an edifice in the northwest part of the city; the Catholic Church stands north of it and the Union Church is in the northeast part of the city. Rev. J. R. Blanton, is the Baptist clergyman; Rev. Mr. Buzzell, the Methodist; Rev. W. P. Teitesworth, the Presbyterian. Rev. The Cow Boy Minstrels, is a semi-operatic organization.

The Dodge City Gun Club is a late organization. The city contains a large number of excellent sportsmen.

The Dodge City Dramatic Society, J. W. Young, manager, furnishes considerable entertainment in comedy and tragedy.

Newspapers.—A. W. Moore, who established the Jackson County News at Holton, in October 1867, in February, 1874, moved his printing material to Dodge City and established the Dodge City Messenger. The publication of the Messenger was suspended in 1875. Mr. Moore, in 1883, is in the newspaper business at Gunnison, Colorado.

Lloyd and Walter C. Shinn were pioneers in the printing business in Western Kansas, having established in Rice County its first newspaper, called the Rice County Herald. They founded the Times at Dodge City May 20, 1876. On December 1, 1877, Nicholas B. Klaine purchased the interest of Walter and in August, 1878, the interest of Lloyd, and became its sole manager; and, in 1883, has the exclusive proprietorship of the paper.

The Ford County Globe was established at Dodge City, in December, 1877, by William N. Morphy and D. M. Frost. Mr. Morphy was editor; he retired from the paper about a year later. Lloyd Shinn became connected with Mr. Frost in the publication of the Globe, and sold out to him his interest in that paper in the summer of 1882; and Mr. Frost is the editor and proprietor in 1883. These papers were Republican in their politics.

Clark is the Notary Public and Justice of the Peace. This place is 283 miles west of the east line of the State. It is 2,478 feet above the sea level. The soil hereabouts is a dry upland prairie, the soil is a dark loam, with stiff clay subsoil. This spot was made an experimental point for tree planting by S. T. Kelsey, forester of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company in 1873 and in 1874. Ailantus planted from seed in the spring of 1874 had attained to the height of six inches, December, 1874; from seed planted in the spring of 1873, it had grown from two to three feet. Black walnut from seed planted in the spring of 1874, reached a height of from six to twelve inches; planted in the spring of 1873, it had a height of from one to one and a half feet; black locust from two and one half to three and one half feet.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY.

LOCATION AND NATURAL FEATURES.*

MONTGOMERY County is situated in the southern part of the State of Kansas, the north line of the Indian Territory forming its southern boundary. It is further bounded by Labette County on the east, Wilson on the north and Elk and Chautauqua counties on the west. The general surface of the county is variable, being a succession of rolling prairies, broad, fertile valleys, and low hills. Elevated mounds, with steep, declivitous sides, are found in places, rising abruptly out of the midst of a plain, to considerable heights. These are, in some instances, peak shaped, while in others they are capped with an almost level plain, comprising, in some cases, several acres in extent. There are several of these mounds in the county, each of which bears some significant name, such as Table Mound, from its table-like appearance, and Walker's Mound, which took its name from a man named Walker, who was first to locate a claim bordering on its base, etc. These elevations are in no way connected with the "Mound Builders," but in their native magnificence bespeak the workmanship of a mightier hand, and wiser builder.

The water supply is abundant throughout the county, which is traversed from north to south by the Verdigris River, and its important tributary, Elk River, both of which are streams of considerable magnitude. In their flow through the county, they become confluent with several large creeks and streams, which, with their innumerable branchings, spread out over the entire surface. The Little Caney River runs through the southwest corner of the county, by which, with its important branches, Illinois and Cheyenne creeks, that part is sufficiently watered. The principal creeks are: Duck, Onion, Salt, Cheyenne, Illinois, Pumpkin, Rock, Sycamore, Drum and Big Hill. There are numerous other smaller ones.

The soil throughout the county generally, is remarkably fertile, particularly that found in the bottoms, which comprise about one-fourth of the entire area of the county.

Timber, as in most parts of the State, is scarce, being confined to the belts along the water courses, varying in width, from a mile to a narrow fringe along the less important streams. Occasional groves are found upon the uplands, but the timber is limited, and of inferior quality. The principal varieties of timber are the oak, walnut, ash, elm, cottonwood, box elder, soft maple and other varieties in limited quantities.

Coal has been discovered in various parts of the county, the fields covering about one-third of its area, in veins varying in thickness from one to two feet. It is found on the surface and, also, cropping out at the base of elevations. The quality of the coal is rather inferior at first, but becomes better as the mines are developed. As yet none of the mines have been utilized to any considerable extent, the use being confined to domestic and local demands. The mine upon J. M. Altaffer's farm, in Independence Township, is, perhaps, the most extensively operated, from which there are about ten thousand bushels mined annually. In localities where the coal abounds, an abundance of potter's clay is also found.

Inexhaustible quarries of fine building stone are numerous. The varieties are sand, lime and flag-stone; much of the sand-stone being of the fine grain and texture, which is so valuable in the construction of stone fronts, window caps, etc.

From this, it will be seen, that the county is eminently superior in its natural advantages; with numerous streams affording fine water power privileges; extensive coal fields; unfailing stone quarries; timber in considerable quantities, and a productive soil. The county has within its limits, all that is necessary to the existence of a rich, prosperous and populous community.

EARLY HISTORY.

Montgomery County comprises a portion of that body of land which was set apart and known as the "Diminished Reserve of the Osage Indians," and embraced an area of 8,000,000 acres. There was a strip of land, however, three miles in width, extending along the east side of the county, which did not form a part of the Reserve, but was a portion of what was called the "Ceded Lands," and was obtained from the Indians in 1867, and opened to settlement. For a long time the right to this strip was in controversy in the courts, between railroad corporations and settlers. The settlers, however, were persistent in their efforts, and through the indomitable pluck and energy of their leader, Gov. M. J. Salter, finally succeeded in obtaining a decision of the United States Supreme Court in their favor. Immediately upon relinquishing their rights to this strip, the Indians, about 3,600 in number, moved farther west and scattered along the valleys of the Verdigris and Elk rivers. Each band, of which there were seven, having an under chief, and the whole under a head chief, lived apart and established villages, bearing the name of the leader of the respective band. White Hair, the head chief, made an encampment near the north line of the county, on the east bank of the Verdigris. Below this a few miles, at Lightman's Ford, Little Beaver found his quarters, and Napawalla settled on the north side of Elk River, near where Radical City was afterward established. On the southside of the same river, Chetopa and his band halted, and built their village near the west end of Table Mound. About six miles south of where Independence now stands, on the west bank of the Verdigris River, was the site of Big Hill, or Gov. Joe's village; Claymore near Kalloch Station, and Black Dog on the west bank of Onion Creek, near its mouth.

The Government agency was located near the mouth of Drum Creek, on its north side, and was held by Maj. Snow, who was succeeded in 1868 by Maj. I. N. Gibson, a Quaker gentleman, who was held in high esteem by both the whites and Indians. This general respect he retained throughout the adjustment of the serious difficulties between the races in 1869 and 1870, occasioned by the unauthorized attempts of settlers to trespass upon and occupy these lands, the rightful property of the Indian.

As early as 1867, when the cupidity of railroad corporations became aroused respecting these lands, there came to light what is known as the "Sturgess Treaty," than which a more stupendous fraud is not known. At this time, the Leavenworth, Lawrence & Galveston Railroad Company sought to effect a treaty with the Osage Indians, through the company's agents, the Sturgess Brothers, of Chicago, by the terms of which the company was to obtain possession of the entire Diminished Reserve, upon payment to the Indians for the land at the rate of eighteen cents per acre. The matter was brought before Congress for its consideration, and the objects of the treaty were defeated by the action of that body.

At a very early period, several trading posts were established by parties who furnished the Indians with flour, coffee, powder, lead, dry goods, trinkets, etc., and in return took as payment hides, furs, and other articles of Indian commerce. Perhaps the earliest establishment of this kind was that made on Pumpkin Creek, by G. L. Canada, in January, 1867. R. W. Dunlap came into the county late in 1867, and in February of the next year began trading at a point near the mouth of Drum Creek; and about the same time John Lushbaugh located a post at the junction of Pumpkin Creek with the Verdigris River. The goods with which Dunlap opened his store were brought by Thomas Overfield, on a wagon, from Ottawa, then the nearest railroad station, and distant more than 100 miles. During the winter of 1868-'69, Mose Neal opened a trading store at the mouth of Big Hill Creek, and in the early part of 1869, Maj. Fitch began a similar business at a point on the north side of Elk River, near its confluence with Sycamore Creek.

Eb. Moseley began the business of trader a short time before Dunlap, having his post at Black Dog town. Newton Miller also had a post in the supply of this band. Hitherto, aggressions upon the Indian domain, in this section, were slight.

The treaty for the purchase of the Osage Diminished Reserve was effected between the Indians and the United States Government, at the agency on Drum Creek, on September 10, 1870, and was stipulated for and signed, on the part of the Government, by J. D. Lang, of Maine, John V. Farwell, of Chicago, and Vincent Colyer, of New York, who had been appointed a commission for this purpose; and on the part of the Osage Indians, was signed by Pi-na-push-a, To-wand-ga-hee, Che-to-pa, Black-Dog, Na-pa-wal-la, Strike-Axe, Wah-tan-ca, Chin-cu-a-cah and others. The official survey and creation of the county dates from 1869, and was made to embrace 636 square miles of territory, carved out of the Osage Reserve. The name Montgomery was applied to it, in honor of the celebrated General, Richard Montgomery. Upon the treaty being effected with the Indians, the land was thrown open to settlement, upon which filings and entry could be made at the land office at Humboldt, Kan The first filing was made by N. S. Ramsey, on a tract of land in Louisburgh Township, and the first entry was made by Thomas Neal, on a tract in Drum Creek Township. There appears to be some difference of opinion as regards who the first permanent settler in the county was. Hon. E. E. Wilson, in his able and authentic history of the county, published in Edwards' County Historical Atlas, accords the honor to a colored man named Lewis Scott, who settled in the southeastern part of the county in February, 1867. A more detailed investigation of the matter discovers the fact, that it was more than a year prior to the date given when the foot of the first settler pressed the soil. In January, 1866, G. L. Canada settled at a point on Pumpkin Creek, which was subsequently selected as the site for the village of Claymore, and to whom the honor of being the first settler undoubtedly belongs. Perhaps, the second man to set foot on Montgomery County soil, as a permanent settler, was Daniel Wilson, who made a settlement, June 14, 1866, locating in the extreme northern part of the county, on the Verdigris River, near White Hair's Ford. In August, 1867, Wilson built a cabin on his claim, and put up a quantity of hay; but his presence was distasteful to his dusky neighbors, who put a torch to his hay and cabin, and all was consumed. No sooner had he constructed another, when that too was demolished. Such treatment was not relished by the hardy pioneer who, becoming disheartened, and finding it useless to make further attempts, left the place. It was not long, however, before he regained his courage, and in September of 1868, he returned to the scene of his former disasters, this time effecting friendly relations with the Indians, and remaining unmolested.

Those who settled in 1867, besides those already named who had established trading-posts, were Zachariah Crow, —- Terwilliger, William Rutherford and perhaps a few others. Among those who came during the next year, wereJohn Russell, J. B. Rowley, Patrick Dugan, William Reed, William Roberts, Christian Greenough, John Hanks, H. W. Conrad, Alexander Duncan, J. A. Twiss, Col. Coffey, O. F. Johns, J. Roberts, T. C., J. H., and A. Graham, P. R. Jordon, G. W., and W. L. Mays, H. A. Bethuran, J. H. Conrad. Moses Roller, R. Stallcup, M. McGowen, R. M. Bennett, John Campbell, Jacob Thompson, Thomas Brock, J. Kappell, Levi Mann, Phillip Waldron, N. P. Morgan, A. P. Patter, W. Sherill, J. Simmons, Rachel Greeno, J. Weddell, Mortimer Goodell, E. Goodell, D. R. B. Flora, R. W. Dunlap, John McIntyre, Mrs. E. C. Powell, Thomas C. Evans, Lewis Choteau, —— Brewer, —— Pierce, George Spece, Dr. Koutz, James Parkinson and, perhaps, some others. Although a considerable number of permanent settlements had been made during these years, yet so few, indeed, were the number living within the county, at that time, compared with the wide expanse of country over which they were scattered, that it was only occasionally that the traveler came upon the rude cabin, dug-out or sod house of a settler. No improvement of importance had yet been made, so that up to 1869 there were but few and scattered evidences of anything except Indian occupancy. In the midst of such surroundings of uncivilized life, the hardy pioneer of Montgomery County had come to make his home, enduring the trials, braving the dangers, expecting the rewards.

In order that a settler should obtain and occupy a "squatter's claim," at this time, he was obliged to secure consent from the Indians, which was easily done by paying them a few dollars in money. The price, however, varied with different bands. In the treaty which the settlers made with the Osages in the Upper Elk Valley, in 1869, the agreement was, that settlers should hold and occupy a prairie claim upon payment of $5, and $10 for a timber claim. Demands for this rental were more frequent than the terms of the agreement allowed, but upon a determined refusal by the settlers, these unauthorized collectors would go away without a word. In no case, however, would they forget to dun a man whenever they met him, whether he was entitled to pay or not, nor did they regard the frequent refusals which they met, nor the severe rebuffs and denunciations they sometimes received, from the enraged squatter. In case there was any dissatisfaction arising from the payment of these sums, in any way, the Indians would demand a "talk," and not unfrequently it would have been better for his own interests, had he made no attempt to compete with the loquacious Yankee, in wordy settlements of this kind.

Although numerous settlements had already been made, yet it was not until 1869, that the resistless march of emigration first crossed the Verdigris River to occupy and possess the "promised land" that lay beyond. Alarmed at this bold step on the part of the settlers, to thus intrude upon and occupy their territory, the Indians began to protest against further invasion, and attempted to prohibit emigration from crossing the Verdigris; but to no purpose.

During the winter of 1869, the banks of the Verdigris were alive with camps and campers. Families spent the winter, living in covered wagons or in huts constructed of hay. On the spot where Independence stands, about forty families lived in these hay houses during that winter, and the place was known to the Indians as Pashe-to-wah, or Haytown. So rapid, indeed, was the influx of settlers, that in the brief period of three years, between 1867 and 1870, the population of the county had increased from a few scattered settlements to the number of 7,564.

Everything now began to show signs of permanence and stability. Rumors of prospective railroads became noised abroad; improvements, both public and private, were made, and of a costly character; town builders were busily at work, establishing towns, which, in their view, were sure to become important railroad points and the county seat; the county was filled with every manner of bogus characters who preyed upon the ignorance and credulity of settlers; here were real estate agents and claim speculators, who for a few dollars would locate a man on whatever place suited him, whether the same had been taken before or not; and not unfrequently the one agent would locate several parties on the same claim; speculators sold claims to which they never had a shadow of title or right.

All was a busy scene of bustle and excitement. This condition of things had the effect to attract emigration thither. As an illustration of the intense excitement which prevailed during this time, may be mentioned the fact, that the people of the county had voted county and township bonds, for various purposes, to an aggregate amount of nearly a million of dollars. Such was the general rapacity and the willingness of the people to vote indebtedness upon themselves, in the excitement of the hour, that a large school building was erected at Independence in 1873, costing $23,000; costly bridges were constructed by various townships; the erection of schoolhouses; and the aids given to railroads, etc., are a few instances of the uses to which this extravagant outlay of public money was applied. Money was readily loaned at from twenty-five to fifty per cent interest to private parties, wishing to improve their claims. As a result of this reckless and extravagant voting of bonds, the rate of taxation upon personal property became enormous, since all levies had to be made upon that class of property, as none of the real estate had yet been deeded. Such was the state of financial matters under which the people of the county had placed themselves prior to 1872.

The first settlements in the county were effected before the regularly authorized surveys had been made, and claims were taken at random, or according to lines, called the "tow string surveys," established by private parties who were chiefly interested in the fees charged, caring little whether lines, sections and quarters were correctly located or not; nor whether they would correspond with the legal survey when made. As the natural consequence of such uncertainty, when the authorized survey was made, it frequently happened that parties found themselves the possessors of a piece of land they did not claim, while that which they thought they had, would fall to their next neighbor. Numerous disputes and wranglings arose among settlers respecting rights to claims, which called into requisition the "Settler's Claim Club." This institution, as the name indicates, was composed of the settlers combined together for the purpose of hearing and adjusting difficulties that arose among themselves or between any of their number and strangers respecting claim rights. In its functions, the club was legislative, judicial and executive. A code of laws was drawn up which defined the rights of settlers to claims, prescribing the mode and manner by which they could rightfully be taken, and also what was necessary to entitle the same to be held and occupied, etc. In case a dispute arose involving questions of this character, the matter was brought for hearing before the club, witnesses were brought and examined, and the matter was fully determined "according to the law and the evidence." A decision having been reached, speedy execution followed.

This was carried out by a committee waiting upon the party against whom the decision had been made, informing him that the club had determined that he should relinquish all claims to the subject of dispute; whereupon notice was given him to deliver over the property to his opponent within a specified time, which in most cases was promptly done. Upon a failure to obey the mandates of this court with promptness, the defiant was waited upon by another committee composed of the body of the club, and, if not awed into submission by the presence and threats of this posse, he was visited with such punishment as the nature of the case required, or as was sufficient to enforce obedience. An instance of this sort of executive duty took place near Independence in the spring of 1870. The dispute arose over a claim between George Paul and a man named Stevens, a butcher living in the town. Paul, it seems, was living on a claim about a mile and a half northwest of Independence, which Stevens "jumped," as it was termed, building a house a few rods from Paul's, into which he moved with his family.

After due consideration, the club found in Paul's favor, and notified Stevens to abandon the premises. Stevens, however, was refractory and refused to obey. The time in which he was to leave having expired, a posse formed and at the dead hour of night invaded his dwelling from which the inmates were forcibly removed to the open prairie and the house set on fire and burned. A similar affair took place during the same summer in Sycamore Township. A man named Atkinson attempted to wrongfully lay claim to a piece of land belonging to another man. The matter was taken before the club, and Atkinson, refusing to obey its determination, was punished by having his building demolished, he being forced to fly. This was the work of that well-known club which had appropriated the dignified title of "Montgomery Guards." It was a time, too, when these organizations, however useful in their day, should have disbanded, giving way to those "higher powers," Justices of the Peace.

The members of the Guards, however, not content to await the tedious and often unsatisfactory actions of these courts, had taken the matter in their own hands. But in this particular instance it would have been better for the members "had it never existed;" for the entire club, thirty in number, were arrested on a charge of riot, brought before Squire Bunker's court at Independence, and, upon trial, found guilty. Thus ingloriously terminated the existence of the "Montgomery Guards," and the last of the claim clubs.

There were several of these organizations in various localities in the county, embracing nearly every law-abiding and peaceably-disposed citizen. Instances occur, too, in which these clubs took in hand matters of a criminal character, as in the case of the assassination of John A. Twiss in the southern part of the county. Twiss, a peaceable and respected citizen, was attacked by a party of three men and foully murdered. This unprovoked act of crime and butchery called forth the indignation and vengeance of the citizens. The criminals were apprehended, a preliminary investigation had, and the guilt was fixed upon the parties charged, who were hanged to an oak tree that stood near the cabin of the murdered man. But municipal organizations being perfected, these clubs became things of the past, giving way to legally constituted tribunals and courts of law.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION, ETC.

By a proclamation made by Governor James M. Harvey, on June 3, 1869, the County of Montgomery became legally organized as a corporate body. A Board of Commissioners was appointed composed of H. C. Crawford, H. A. Bethuran and R. L. Walker; and E. C. Kimball was appointed Clerk, and the seat of government for the county temporarily fixed at Verdigris City. On June 11, these parties appeared before W. S. McFeeters, a notary public, and received the oath of office.

The first official act of the Board of Commissioners was to divide the county into townships and fix the voting precincts. Three townships were made, viz: Drum Creek, Westralia and Verdigris, which have since been redivided and changed, making in all twelve townships. Three voting places were named—one for each township. That for Drum Creek was at Fitch's store; for Verdigris at Verdigris City, and for Westralia at the town bearing the same name. The Oswego Register published by E. R. Trask, was made the official paper. At the second meeting of the Board, July 7, a permit was granted to W. C. Dickey and Daniel McTaggart to establish a ferry on the Verdigris River, at a point near Verdigris City, and also one to W. L. Bailey and H. C. Crawford for a similar enterprise at Westralia. Steps were taken to establish a public highway to lead from the town of Westralia to the west line of the county. The third meeting was held August 27, at which E. K. Kountz was appointed Probate Judge, George Hoag, Sheriff, and Daniel McTaggart, County Treasurer.

An election for the choosing of county officers, and also for fixing the county seat, was held November 2, 1869. The greatest interest seems to have been at Independence, as an aspirant for county seat honors. On the morning of the election a wagon-load of Independence men started early to the polls, in order that they might secure control of the election board; but, notwithstanding their rapid travel, reached the place in time to find they had only gotten one member. Close watch upon voters was kept up during the day at the polls, and challenges were frequent, necessitating nearly all votes to be sworn in. A canvass of the vote was made, and the vote of Drum Creek precinct was thrown out, on account of the returns being certified to as a copy instead of the original poll-book. As a result, Liberty was selected as the county seat, and a Board of Commissioners elected who were friendly to that place. The Independence people were sore under this galling defeat, and filed a notice of contest before the Probate Court of Wilson County, to which this county was then attached for judicial purposes. The matter was brought to the consideration of the court December 23, which decided, in effect, that no election had been held, and consequently no contest could be made. This, of course, placed matters in statu quo, and the old board still continuing in the exercise of their official powers, proceeded to cause the seat of government to be removed from Verdigris City to Liberty, which was done in the face of many protests and much dissatisfaction.

The friends of Independence had set their heads together and evolved a piece of strategy in which they proved successful. Charles White, bearing a certified copy of the case contested before the Wilson County Probate Court, was sent to Topeka to lay the matter before the proper authorities of state, and by this means secured the appointment of a new Board of Commissioners, composed of W. W. Graham, Thomas Brock and S. B. Moorehouse. After White returned from the capital, he in company with L. J. Stephenson, procured a wagon, and gathering in the newly appointed Board, drove them to Verdigris City, where, seated in the conveyance, the Board organized by electing W. W. Graham, Chairman, and appointed J. A. Helphingstine County Clerk, Samuel Van Gundy, County Treasurer; J. K. Snyder, Register of Deeds; and R. B. Cunningham, Superintendent of Schools.

The Independence Pioneer was named as the official paper of the county and the District Court ordered to be held at Independence on the 9th of May, 1870. The Board then appointed Independence as temporary county seat, and ordered the offices to be kept at that place. On May 13 an action was begun in the District Court to compel the commissioners to move the county offices to Liberty; but the case was dismissed by the plaintiffs, and the matter left at rest. Thus the old Board of Commissioners were superseded, but they were not willing to submit to such seemingly unauthorized proceedings. Finding it useless to dissent, however, after a few weeks they surrendered their records and gave up the contest.

With the organization of the county, on June 3, 1869, the county seat was temporarily fixed at Verdigris City, by the appointment made in the Governor's proclamation. At the regular county election held on the 2d of November, of the same year, it was deemed changed by the Board of Commissioners, and was taken to Liberty, the place thought to be determined by the vote of the people. The matter was taken before the courts for contest, and it was decided that no election had been held. In May, of the following year, the case, about which there was so much dispute and dissatisfaction, was taken before the authorities of state and a new Board of Commissioners was appointed, who, when they had regularly organized, named Independence as the seat of government for the county, and ordered that all the officers should take up their quarters at that place, which was accordingly done. In the following November another regular election was held, and among the issues to be determined was, as to where the county seat should be located. The election was an exceedingly warm one and much fraud was practiced and illegal voting done on all sides. In this contest, however, Independence came out victorious over its most potent rival, Liberty, by a majority of 279 votes, the vote being 889 for Independence and 610 for Liberty. This was the final determination of the matter, the seat of government becoming fixed at Independence, where in right it should be, as the most central and available point in the county.

The first building the county possessed was a log court house, located at Verdigris City, when the county seat was at that place, and was moved to Liberty by order of the County Commissioners. The county seat was afterward fixed at Independence, when the old log building was abandoned, and shortly after the change was made a new court house was built by Samuel Van Gundy, and was the first brick building in the county. It is still used by the county for offices and court room. Until the erection of this house, the District Court had occupied the schoolhouse at Independence in its first sitting, and Rose & Fay's hall in its second, then in the present court house.

Prior to its incorporation, Montgomery was attached to Wilson County for judicial purposes. Within her own limits there were no courts of justice, but the absence of these was in a measure supplied by the self-appropriated authorities of the claim clubs, which surrendered all authority upon the advent of those courts of high judicial standing, Justice's Courts. For a higher tribunal than these, resort was made to the courts of Wilson County. Montgomery County was made a part of the Eleventh Judicial District, and by the authority vested in the County Commissioners, the District Court for and in the county was ordered to be held at Independence on the 9th day of May, 1870. The time for the convening of the court had arrived and all the dignitaries of the law were on hand. The session was held in the school building, and the following court officers were present: Hon. W. C. Webb, Judge; L. J. Stephenson, Clerk of the District Court; C. M. Ralstine, County Attorney, and C. White, Sheriff. Those reported on the grand jury were: Daniel McTaggart, George A. Brown, George Whitfield, William Jackson, William Addy, J. Porter, W. H. Cox, Elijah Vansandt, Samuel Van Gundy, Frank Coventry, L. C. Judson, B. E. Clark, J. J. Gregory and W. O. Sylvester, and on the petit jury were, Edward Barnett, A. M. Smith, William Orwig, John Saunderson, Thomas Reed, Elias Lovett, J. K. Snyder, S. D. Kelley, David Hodson, George Stills, E. T. Saunders and A. J. Stevens.

The grand jury at this sitting returned six indictments, one for murder in the first degree, three for murder in the second degree, and two for assault with intent to kill. The first jury trial before this court was had May 10, 1870. The title of the case was, the State of Kansas against Henry Adams. The charge was grand larceny, and the verdict of the jury in the case was "not guilty."

Those admitted to the practice of law were: D. B. Brown, O. P. Smart, Thomas Harrison, C. H. Wyckoff, John Helphingstine, T. B. Jennings, W. G. Clark and L. C. Judson.

The first sitting of the court was held in the school building, and the second in Rose & Fay's hall, and the third in the present court house, in which it has since been held in regular term.

RAILROADS AND COUNTY SOCIETIES.

Early in the history of the county the people became wild on the subject of railroads. They were not content with the slow and tedious methods of horse back and stage coach travel, and lumber wagon transportation, but believed that a railroad was necessary to satisfy their advanced demands, and to raise them up to the standard of the times. Every argument that ingenuity could invent was produced to convince the doubtful and stimulate the weak, in the belief of the splendid results that must inevitably follow so grand an enterprise. When the public anxiety became inflamed to the highest pitch a proposition was placed before the people, by the Leavenworth, Lawrence & Galveston Railroad Company, asking them to contribute in county bonds the amount of two hundred thousand dollars toward building a railroad. This was what a majority of the people wanted and, in June, 1870, a vote was taken on the proposition, and out of a total vote of 2,166, there were 1,340 votes in favor of the bonds, to 826 against them. The proposition, too, was indefinite as to where the line should be run, but was simply that a line of not less than twenty-one miles of road should be built somewhere within the limits of the county. The election, too, was an extremely loose one, as ballots in some instances were cast regardless of age or qualification. Those living in the vicinity of Independence, from whence the controlling vote came, were particularly zealous, believing that the road would, without doubt, make that an objective point. But as it afterwards turned out, they had unnecessarily congratulated themselves; for, instead of the road being built to or in the direction of the place, it bent its course several miles to the east of it, turning southward and terminating at Coffeyville, in the southeastern part of the county. Here, then, was Independence deserted by the railroad company, and left standing alone far to the west, and fairly raging in indignation, threatening revenge for such cruel treatment from this soulless corporation. An effort was then put forth by the county to defeat the delivery of the bonds to the company. The matter was brought before the United States Court at Leavenworth, in July, 1871. The county was represented before the court, by E. W. Fay, of Peru; A. H. Horton, of Atchison, and Stillings & Fenlon, of Leavenworth. After a time the Board of County Commissioners ordered the suit abandoned, making concessions in favor of the railroad company; whereupon it was ordered that the bonds be delivered according to the terms of the agreement, which was accordingly done. The bonds were then sold by the company and passed into the hands of innocent purchasers, who, as the coupons fell due, presented them for payment; but the county authorities declined even to make a levy for their payment. A suit was immediately instituted for their collection by law, in which the county thought again to test the legality of the bonds. This suit was attended with much quibbling and dilatory moves, by means of which it hung in the courts for several years.

A compromise was finally effected between the Board of County Commissioners and the bondholders, whereby the bondholders agreed to take new bonds in payment of the old ones, at the rate of sixty-five cents on the dollar, and thus the matter became permanently settled, at an expense to the county, however, of about $80,000. The amount of the bonds thus disposed of did not cover the entire amount by $20,000, which was in the hands of an English firm, and which was afterwards redeemed by county treasurer Cary Oakes, at fifty cents on the dollar.

Although Independence was unhappily disappointed in this instance, yet it by no means defeated or weakened her determination in that direction. A railroad she would have, cost what it might, and, hence, the next best thing was to secure a branch road. Committee after committee was delegated to solicit this, and also to open negotiations with the railroad authorities, in which they should agree upon the terms upon which it should be built. The town offered, as a proposition, to vote the company a subsidy of $7,500 per mile to assist in its construction; but the company was slow to accept, in order to stimulate the people to greater donations. Finally it came to the knowledge of the people of the town, in a quiet way, that in case they increased the donation already offered, by a cash contribution of $4,000, and one hundred lots in the town, the branch would be constructed. No sooner had the authenticity of this report become confirmed, than the company was approached upon the subject and the additional demands guaranteed, upon which the agreement was consummated.

So anxious, indeed, were many of the citizens of the town to secure the advantages to be gained by the enterprise, that a number of them entered into an individual obligation of $50,000, as a security and guarantee that the propositions agreed upon, would be faithfully carried out by the town. Accordingly a hasty construction was prosecuted and the branch was completed during the latter part of the year 1871, and on the first day of January, 1872, the reverberations of the steam whistle through the valley of the Verdigris, announced to the over-enthusiastic inhabitants of the town, the approach of the iron horse, drawing behind his giant form, the first train of cars that ever rolled into the station at Independence. This branch was known as "Bunker's Plug," and was so named after Mr. Bunker, who was prominently engaged in obtaining it, and who also donated grounds for a depot. This was continued in operation as a branch road until the summer of 1879, when the South Kansas & Western road was built, westward through the county, connecting with the main line of the Leavenworth, Lawrence & Southwestern road, at the town of Cherryvale, in the east part of the county. It was, however, but a westward continuation of "Bunker's Plug." During the same summer, the St. Louis, Warsaw & Western road was built, cutting across the northeast corner of the county, via Cherryvale, at which place it crossed the L. L. & G. road. The narrow gauge road was extended from Parsons, Labette County, to Cherryvale, in the fall of 1880. With this ended the construction of railroads in the county, and of which there is now an aggregate of sixty-five miles.

The name of the South Kansas & Western road was afterward changed and became the Kansas City, Lawrence & Southern Railway.

Montgomery County Agricultural Society was organized in July, 1871, with Benjamin M. Armstrong, president; J. R. Galloway, vice president; and E. K. Wilson, secretary. The first fair was held, in Independence, in the autumn of 1873, and regular exhibitions have been held annually since that time. The present officers of the society are—M. J. Salter, president; A. T. Peterson, vice president; V. M. Dewey, secretary; and Cary Oakes, treasurer. In the Centennial Exposition, at Philadelphia, in 1876, the exhibition made by the South Kansas Tribune Company, for the county, ranked first among the products of the State, in grasses and grains. A selection from the products of the county, under charge of L. A. Walker, was on exhibition at Bismarck Grove, in September, 1880. Some of the vegetables took the highest premium, and the entire collection was generally regarded as a fine display. The same collection, upon invitation by the authorities at the Kansas City Exposition, was placed upon exhibition at that place. The county took the highest premium.

and awarded a medal. A large exhibition ground is provided and supplied with a commodious exposition hall, stables and pens for exhibiting stock, and also an excellent speed ring.

SCHOOL AND OTHER STATISTICS.

That the citizens of Montgomery County paid early and liberal attention to the matter of the education of the youth and the establishment and maintenance of good schools, can not be doubted. In proof of the statement, it may be added, that as early as 1872 there were already organised eighty-seven school districts, nearly all of which were supplied with amply furnished and comfortable school buildings. The amount of bonds issued by the various districts for this purpose, aggregated $120,000. From this favorable start still further growth was made, so that, in 1878, a period of six years, there were 102 organized school districts in the county, and one hundred school buildings, of which four were log, ninety frame, four brick and two stone. The number of the school population was 6,212, and the value of all school property was $101,817. Perhaps, the first term of school was taught by Miss Laura Foote, at Claymore, in 1869. And undoubtedly the next public school in the county was that taught by William Osborne, in the same year, at Elk City, the school being held in the hotel building erected by Thomas Harris. Subscription schools, however, had been taught at a very early date. In this county, of the lands set apart for school purposes, 4,270 acres remains unsold, of the average value of $3.50.

The annual report of the Superintendent of Schools shows a total number of districts in the county of 105; number of school buildings 103, or 126 school rooms. The total value of the buildings, furniture, etc., is estimated at $101,250.

The school population is 7,376 and the average daily attendance for the year was 3,656 under the instruction of 161 teachers. There are three excellent graded schools in the county, viz.—those at Independence, Coffeyville and Cherryvale. Elk City has also a partially graded school system. There were also nineteen private schools held in the county during the year with an enrollment of 482 pupils. A normal for the special training of teachers is held annually. This institution was opened for 1882, on July 5th, and continued twenty weeks, conducted by C. T. Beach. The enrollment was 123 and the average daily attendance 101. The receipts of institute funds for the year, including balance from last year, were $324.36. Expenses were $296.75, leaving a balance of $27.61. The receipts for the county school funds, for the year ending August 1, 1882, amounted to $45,360, while the expense aggregated $41,896.21. The balance on hand August 1, 1881, was $7,488, and on August 1, 1882, $3,463. In 1882 there were school bonds issued by various districts to the amount of $8,685, making a total bonded indebtedness of the districts, mostly in the cities, of $31,330.

No more reliable or convincing proof of the development of a section of country can be had than that exhibited from the statistics of the acreage under cultivation, the amount of the cereals productions, the number of various sorts of animals raised, etc., for different periods of time. For this purpose, a review of the statistics, for the years 1878 and 1882, are given in the following, in a comparative view:

In 1870, the population of the county was 7,564; in 1875, it was 13,017; in 1878, 16,468, and in 1882, reached nearly 20,000.

The number of acres under cultivation in 1878 was 168,188.19, of the value of $1,826,760.81; and in 1882, it was 242,887, valued at $2,731,327.

In 1878, there was produced 42,253 acres of wheat; 166 of rye; 59,336, corn; 8,965, oats; 183, barley; 103, buckwheat; 990, Irish potatoes; 74, sweet potatoes; 727, sorghum; 173 castor beans; 3, cotton; 2,757, flax; 1, hemp; 16, tobacco; 121, broom corn; 1,807, millet and Hungarian; 569, timothy meadow; 118, clover meadow; value of garden products, $5,856; value of poultry and eggs, $8,476.75; pounds of cheese produced, 4,690; pounds of butter produced, 24,959.

INDEPENDENCE.

A little north and east of the exact geographical center of Montgomery County, upon the west bank of the Verdigris River and on the line of the Kansas City, Lawrence & Southern Kansas Railway is the city of Independence. In the month of August, 1869, a little band of men, headed by R. W. Wright, left the city of Oswego, Kan., with the hope that somewhere in the newer regions of the State they, perchance, might find a favorable spot and become the founders of a city. Steering their course to the west and south, they reached the valley of the Verdigris River. As they explored along the banks of this stream and through the magnificent valley which skirts it on either side, the impression was forced upon them that here was the foundation for a rich and prosperous agricultural country, the basis and support of a thriving city. The first halt was made at Montgomery City, in Drum Creek Township, but failing to obtain satisfactory arrangements with the Town Company that was already formed there, they determined to depend upon their own unaided powers, and to found a city of opposition that should bear in its name the spirit that prompted to its establishment, namely: Independence. Accordingly, the present site was chosen, comprising an even section of land. A part of the grounds selected was already occupied as claims by Frank Bunker and W. O. Sylvester, but these parties were induced to make a change, so as to give the town company the entire section. It was then surveyed and laid off into town lots by Capt. Hamer and G. A. Brown, and everything made ready to begin at once the sale of lots and the work of building. The first building erected upon the site was a log cabin, which Frank Bunker had built for a claim house. This hut, in a tumble-down shape, remains to this day, a fitting reminder to the passer-by of the hardships, privations and meagre comforts of those pioneer days. On the 11th of September, the founders of the town and their friends thought to initiate the place and mark the event as historic by a season of rejoicing. The feast consisted of a roast ox, a whole barrel of bread, and four kegs of beer, which the party had brought from Oswego by wagon and ox-team, with J. N. Debrule as teamster. When they reached the Verdigris River, and attempted its passage, the ox nature of the team asserted itself, and in the struggle that ensued the provisions were thrown from the wagon into the turbulent waters. A hasty attempt was made to recover them, and the main part, including the beer, was soon fished out, and the party went on their way rejoicing. Within a week after the town was founded, a paper called the Independence Pioneer was published, being printed at Oswego, under the management of E. R. Trask. Through it the town became widely advertised, and, in this regard, enjoyed a decided advantage over other competing points. In October a party of eighteen families of emigrants from Indiana, headed by Samuel Parkhurst, took up quarters in the town, and constructed hay sheds, in which they lived during the winter. During the summer the town company erected a double log hotel, called the Judson House, for the accommodation of travelers. The first business house was established in October, 1869, by E. E. Wilson and F. D. Irwin. Business was not very pressing at this time, and it is said that these men made hay on the town site while they watched for customers to enter their store. Early settlers, however, will remember, with a smile, perhaps, the establishment that was kept on the west bank of the river, just over the bank from the town, bearing the bold and unique inscription at its front: "Bred and Pize for Saile huar." In May, 1870, by action of the Board of Commissioners, the place became the county seat, and in the following November became fixed as the official county town by a vote of the people. By the 1st of January, 1872, the branch railway, known as "Bunker's Plug," was completed to the town. Although Independence had suffered disappointment in the first instance of railroad building, yet she was not to be left without the advantages of an institution of this kind, cost what it should.

A. Waldschmidt, A. L. Ross and E. B. Carpenter, each located a saw mill in the vicinity about the month of December, 1869, and Waldschmidt also built a grist mill in 1870, the first in the county. The Government Land Office was located here in March, 1872. All these institutions had the effect to make Independence the chief point of attraction in the county, and her progress became marvelous. From the spring of 1871 to the same time in 1872, over 200 houses were built and the population swelled from 1,000 to about 2,300. Following this, however, its growth became slower and more healthful and the city now contains a population of about 3,000, and is a fine commercial town.

A post office was established at Independence, July 1, 1870, and also a mail route by which the mail was brought. Prior to this, parties had their mail brought from Oswego by private individuals, who received ten cents per letter for the trouble. Those who had been thus engaged were: L. T. Stevenson, M. L. Hickey and J. C. Woodrow. The first Postmaster was F. D. Irwin, whose appointment bears date with the first establishment of the office, and who received for his services a salary of $12 per year. The office has been held officially by F. D. Irwin, A. H. Moore, N. H. Ives and the present incumbent, W. T. Yoe.

The city is reached by various tri and semi-weekly stage mail lines from different parts of the county, besides the K. C., L., & S. K. Railroad, the chief artery through which its mails are received and sent.

The Government Land Office was located at Independence in March, 1872. Efforts had previously been made for this purpose, committee after committee having been sent to Washington, but without effect. Finally, however, arrangements were perfected with the local land officials, by means of which its location was secured, but not without some expense to the city, which paid for the privilege about $1,900.

The office, since its first establishment, has been under the charge of P. B. Maxom, M. W. Reynolds, Mr. Nichols, W. W. Martin, W. H. Waters and M. J. Salter, the latter being the present Register, and H. M. Walters, Receiver. Of the public domain, there is yet 16,000 acres open for settlement in this county. This includes the lands belonging to the General Government, those owned by institutions of learning and the common schools.

CITY GOVERNMENT, SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.

Pursuant to a proclamation issued by the Probate Judge, Independence became incorporated as a village on the 23d of July, 1870; J. H. Pugh, J. E. DonLavy, E. E. Wilson, R. F. Hall and O. P. Smart were constituted a Board of Trustees, of which, at the first meeting, R. F. Hall was made chairman, and J. B. Craig, clerk. In a short time, however, the place had outgrown village proportions. At a meeting of the trustees, on the 16th of the following November, steps were taken toward its incorporation as a city of the third class, and notice was given that an election would be held at the office of 'Squire Bunker on the 29th of November, to chose a mayor and five councilmen to serve until the election of their successors, in the following April. The day arrived and the election was held with A. G. Savage, Lewis Connor and Samuel Van Gundy as judges. Two candidates were voted upon for Mayor; these were E. E. Wilson and J. B. Craig, the latter being elected by a majority of four votes out of a total vote cast of 182.

Those chosen as Councilmen were: Thomas Stevenson, A. Waldtschmidt, W. T. Bishop, G. H. Brodie and F. D. Irwin. C. M. Ralstine was elected City Clerk, and J. E. DonLavy, Treasurer upon the first meeting of the city authorities, and subsequently, William Hendricks was appointed Marshal. As early as March 20, 1872, Independence had attained a population of 2,382, and accordingly, on that date, was authoritatively and officially declared a city of the second class. At the first election held under the advanced organization, James DeLong was chosen Mayor; Osbun Shannon, Police Judge; J. I. Crouse, Treasurer; T. P. Tonvelle, Marshal. J. M. Nevins, W. Dawson, S. A. Weir, J. Beard, J. Morland, J. Kerr, J. Bloxom and E. T. Mears, Councilmen.

Since the incorporation of Independence as a city the office of Mayor has been held by J. B. Craig, E. E. Wilson, James DeLong, D. B. Gray, W. E. Brown, Frank Jocelyn, William Dunkin and George Burchard.

The first school in Independence was taught by Miss Mary Walker, in 1870, and was kept in the building now used by the United Brethren's Congregation for church purposes. In this building, and also in a private hall, the schools were held for about three years. In 1873, a commodious school building was erected at a cost of $23,000. It is a two-story brick structure, very artistically constructed with appropriate projections, and contains eight spacious rooms. This was sufficient for the accommodation of the schools for some time; but at length even this became cramped for room, and in 1880 another building was erected. This also is a two-story brick house, of tasteful architecture in its proportions, contains four rooms and was erected at a cost of $8,500. Both of these buildings are surrounded by large grounds, enclosed by a neatly trimmed hedge, and are tastefully ornamented with shade trees.

The schools have undergone a thorough system of grading, which includes in the curriculum all the higher branches of learning. The number of children of school age in the city for 1882 was 1,130, of which number there was an enrollment of 794, with an average daily attendance of 503, under charge of eleven teachers, with T. W. Conway as principal. The expenses of the schools for the year ending August 1, 1882, amounted to $9,624.81.

The first religious services in Independence were held in Mrs. McClurg's hay-shed residence, in December, 1869, and were conducted by the Rev. Thomas Canfield. The first Sunday school was organized about the same time, and at the same place, with John McDill as Superintendent. The Christian character of the citizens of the city is evidenced in the many flourishing church organizations in existence.

The first Methodist Episcopal society was organized by Rev. William Laird, in 1870, and during the next year was made a station by Rev. Mr. Lewis, Presiding Elder. The church building was erected in 1875, and is a very artistically constructed brick structure, surmounted with a steeple. The congregation, now numbering a membership of one hundred and twenty, is under charge of Rev. Thomas C. Hunt.

The Presbyterian Church was organized through the efforts of Rev. Mr. Brown, in the spring of 1870. The first elders were Daniel Cline and John McDill. In the fall of 1870, Rev. Mr. Stoddard came to the charge, in which he continued about four years. The pulpit at the present time is filled by Rev. R. B. Herron. The church building was erected in 1882, and is constructed of brick, brought by team from Baldwin City and Chanute. The membership of the congregation is now over one hundred in number.

The Baptist Church was established in October, 1870, under the special direction of Rev. Mr. Williams. A church house was erected during the following summer, and was the first church building in the place. The society numbers seventy-five members, and is without a regular minister.

The Congregational Church was formed in 1871, by Rev. Mr. Tunnell, since of Wyandotte, who was the first pastor. The church house is a very neat one-story, frame building and is very tastefully furnished. A parsonage was built near the church house during 1881. The society is under the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Bosworth, and has forty-seven members.

The Lutheran Church was organized under the supervision of Rev. S. Karth, in 1872. A country church was also built, a small, one-story frame. The membership numbering about twenty-five, is under the spiritual guidance of Rev. A. Kramer.

The Catholic Church was formed as a body, at Independence, in 1873, by Father Panziglione, of Osage Mission. Until 1878, the people of this faith received monthly visitation from some of the fathers of the Mission, and after this date Rev. Robert Lacherr became resident pastor, for this and surrounding Missions, and in the following October was succeeded by Rev. P. School, the present pastor in charge. A church site was procured during the winter of 1880, and work upon the erection of the edifice began in the following May. The dimensions of the house now building, is one hundred feet long by seventy-five feet wide, to be two stories high, constructed of stone, and surmounted with a steeple one hundred and twenty-seven feet high. The upper story will be fitted up for an auditorium, and the lower one will be suitably sub-divided into a chapel and rooms for school purposes.

The Episcopal Church was established here in 1871. The church house was erected in the following summer, during the pastoral charge of Rev. Mr. Beatty. The membership of the society is small and they are without a pastor.

The United Brethren Church was formed in 1871, with Rev. M. Evans, now of Radical City, as pastor. The society has a membership of about thirty, under charge of Rev. Mr. Rorick.

There is a Methodist Episcopal society, composed of the colored population of the city, who have a church edifice. Rev. David Ross is pastor.

There is also an African Methodist society, distinct from this, with Rev. W. C. Reed, pastor, and is made up from the negro population. Also a Baptist congregation, composed of colored people. Rev. Mr. Stanwood, pastor.

SOCIETIES, THE PRESS, ETC.

The social and mutual benefit fraternities are here represented in eight different lodges or societies:

Fortitude Lodge, No. 107, A., F. & A. M., was instituted October 19, 1871, with E. Herring, master; John Morrison, senior warden, and J. M. Stevens, junior warden. The lodge, at present, has a membership of 150, and is among the oldest and wealthiest organizations of the kind in the State. A large and elegantly furnished hall is also provided, also elegant wardrobe and handsome jewels. B. F. Masterman is present worshipful master.

Keystone Chapter, No. 22, R. A. M., was instituted October 14, 1873. The first official members were: James Weatherby, high priest; John Morrison, king, and Alexander Moore, scribe. The lodge now contains sixty members with B. F. Masterman, high priest.

St. Bernard Commandery, No. 10, K. T., was organized May 15, 1878. H. M. Walters was chosen first commander; R. H. Nichols, generalissimo; J. Weathersby, captain general. Meetings are held monthly in the Masonic Hall, and H. L. Payne is the present excellent commander.

The lodge, at present, numbers a membership of twenty-one and is under the following officers: Thomas Harrison, chief patriarch; T. C. Truman, senior warden; D. S. Lockwood, junior warden; A. Zigler, chancellor; Mrs. M. M. Miller, advocate; M. J. Salter, president; V. M. Dewey, secretary; E. E. Wilson, treasurer; T. N. Sickles, accountant. The organization has now only fifty-two members, and is officered as follows: J. B. Zigler, president and chancellor; V. M. Dewey, secretary; Mrs. M. J. Dewey, accountant; E. E. Wilson, treasurer.

The first effort at journalism in the county, was that made by E. R. Trask, in the publication of the Independence Pioneer, the paper being printed at Oswego, until in March, 1870, when it was printed in the town of Independence, with David Steel as editor. The paper was sold to Thomas H. Canfield, in December, and the name was changed, becoming the Independence Republican, and after changing hands several times, was removed to Howard County, in 1874. Of those editing the paper following Canfield and prior to its removal, were, respectively, L. M. Andrews, Captain Parker and John Q. Page.

In 1870, M. V. B. Bennett came to Independence, where he scattered light and learning to the people, through his somewhat sensational sheet, the Kansas Democrat. This enterprise began in December, but this part of Kansas seems to have been too "dry" for Democratic sustenance, for the paper was sold out to Peacock & Sons, and after a year, taken to Topeka.

The South Kansas Tribune was established in March, 1871, by L. U. Humphrey and W. T. Yoe. In 1872, George Burchard bought Humphrey's interest, who again, in 1874, disposed of the same to Charles Yoe, and the firm became W. T. & C. Yoe, who have since continued the publication of the paper, without the omission of a single issue. It is an eight column folio, Republican in politics and has a circulation of 1200 copies.

In the fall of 1873, W. H. Watkins established a paper at Independence, called the Southern Kansan, which was generally held in high esteem by its many readers as a good paper. The paper was subject to numerous changes of proprietors, and, in 1878, came into the hands of W. H. Warner who in connection with the weekly issue, also published a morning daily, with J. B. Rowley as city editor. This enterprise also failed, for want of sufficient financial provender.

John [illegible] Stinson began the issue of a tri-weekly paper called the Itemiser, in June, 1879. As an editor and journalist, Stinson was well liked by all his patrons, and although his paper enjoyed gratifying success, yet his restless and unsettled disposition led him to abandon the field and move to Colorado.

The Star, was established at Coffeyville, Kan., April 14, 1881, under the name of the Coffeyville Star, by H. W. Young, who brought his press and material from Galva, Ill. On the 14th of October, 1881, the location of the paper was changed to Independence, where it is now published as the Independence Star. The sheet is Democratic in politics, and having had the subscription list of the Living Age, a greenback paper, added to its own, now enjoys a wide circulation and patronage, and stands prominent as an educator of public sentiment, throughout the county.

The Evening Reporter, a daily paper, was started September 12, 1881, by R. C. Harper and S. M. Wassam. After four months it was taken by Harper, who is now sole proprietor and editor. It is a five column folio; independent in politics and has a circulation of 400 copies.

The Independence Kansan, was begun in February, 1882, by A. A. Stewart. The paper is Democratic in politics and is enjoying gratifying prosperity, and is equal in influence to any paper in the county.

Banks.—Independence boasts of two monetary institutions as banks of deposit. The first established of these was Hull's Banking Company, in December, 1871 by C. A, and Edgar Hull, and is a private institution. A banking house was erected in 1872 and is a substantial two story brick building. A double vault is provided with Hall's best Time Lock Safe.

A similar institution was started in 1871, by J. Q. Page, who sold out in 1873, to W. F. Turner and W. E. Otis, and is now operated as a private bank under the firm name of W. E. Otis & Co

MANUFACTURES.

The first manufactory in the city, and indeed, the first in the county, is the water power flouring mill at this place. It was established in 1870 by Alexander Waldtschmidt. The power is derived from the Verdigris River, and the mill has a capacity for grinding 250 bushels of wheat, and 150 bushels of corn per day. It is now owned by W. F. Turner, and is held under lease by G. Koehn, who is engaged in its operation. A cotton gin was also attached, and is operated in season.

The Independence City Mills is a flouring mill, and was established by A. H. Arter in 1876. The institution was sold July, 1880, to J. A. Roth and G. H. Humble, and in June, 1882, came into the sole possession of J. A. Roth. The mill contains three run of buhrs, and has a capacity for grinding 100 barrels of flour per day, and is run by steam power. The building is three stories, built of brick and stone, and stands near the heart of the city.

Independence Woolen Mills.—This enterprise was begun here in April, 1882, by Samuel Sharp, and is under the management of W. P. Sharp, as agent. It is what is known as a two set, or double set mill, and contains 480 spindles, ten looms, and eighty spindles for yarns, also a complete set of finishing machinery for the manufacture of jeans, cassimeres, blankets, flannels, yarns, in fancy colors, and knit goods of various kinds. The goods are made of the best material, all wool, no cotton or shoddy being used. The mill has a capacity for making 350 pounds of yarn per day, and 3,000 yards of woven goods per week, requiring the employment of thirty hands. The goods find a market all over the State, traveling salesmen being employed in their sale. The factory building is 125x50, one story and a half high, solidly constructed of stone. The motive power is steam, a thirty-five horse power engine being used. The entire establishment, including buildings, machinery, and all, was fitted up at a cost of $25,000.

The Caledonia Flour Mill was established September 29, 1874, by a man named Ballentyne. In about two years P. Scott became interested as partner in the concern. The firm owing to reckless management of their finances and business, became insolvent and the mill came into the hands of W. F. Turner, the present owner, under a mortgage which he held upon the property. It was leased by S. S. Tyler in January, 1877, who has since continued its successful operation. The mill building is a story and half frame, of rather small linear dimensions, but is fitted up with excellent machinery, with three run of buhrs, and purifying and scouring machines. The motor power is a thirty-five horse power engine, and the establishment has a capacity for grinding about 100 barrels of flour per day.

The Eagle Flouring Mill was built in the fall of 1882 by G. W. Bowen, and is the largest flouring mill in the county. The building is a substantial stone structure, 50x36 feet, and four stories high, with a one story engine room 50x30, to which is built a smoke stack seventy-one feet high, the base of which to the height of about fifteen feet is of solid stone masonry, ten feet square, the balance being brick. The machinery is complete and of the latest model. Four four-foot buhrs, and two set of patent rolls are used in grinding, with a united capacity of over 100 barrels of flour per day. The propelling power is a sixty horse power engine. The mill is built immediately upon the railroad, thus affording easy and convenient shipment of manufactured goods.

The Independence Canning Factory was established in May, 1882, by J. Keepers, and on August 21, was sold to A. G. Ritz and M. C. Putnam, the present owners and operators, in the canning of fruits, vegetables, corn, mince meat, butters, preserves, etc. The building is three stories high, 60x40 to which is appended a cook room 20x16 feet, one story in height, the whole, including also machinery, costing about $7,500. The factory has a capacity for canning fifteen thousand (15,000) cans per day. So far, however, the highest number of cans filled in any one day was three thousand (3,000). During the canning season over one hundred hands are kept in employment. The firm are supplied with all the necessary machinery and make all their own solder and cans.

The Independence Coal Company was organized in 1881 for the purpose of developing the coal mining interests and industry of the county. An executive committee was constituted with G. W. Donaldson, president; J. W. Price, secretary; and W. E. Otis, treasurer; whose duty is to manage the business of the enterprise. The committee comprises nine members, and in the entire, manages the general affairs, while its officers, the president, secretary and treasurer, are empowered to transact the ordinary business affairs. The farm of W. R. Mozier, lying about two miles southwest of the city, was leased by the company for a term of forty-nine years for mining purposes. The coal vein underlying this property is two feet thick, and of excellent quality. A single shaft is operated, from which in the last eight months there have been taken about 10,000 bushels of coal. The company design opening other shafts and also intend making further explorations for this mineral in other parts of the county.

Many photographers in the State send their work to him to receive the finishing touches. W. S. BROWN, better known as "Osage" Brown, farmer and stockman, was born in Wyandotte County, Ohio, May 11, 1831. When he was seventeen years of age he went to Iowa, where he worked on a farm for two years. He saved his money, bought oxen, and took a job of breaking prairie on the reservation of the Crow Indians in Minnesota. In the fall he started to return to Ohio, but at Galena, Ill., took the cholera, and lay there six weeks, sick. Finally staged it to Chicago, and then took boat to Cleveland. Reaching his father's farm he remained until spring, and then started for California, going via Panama. The company that sold him his ticket failed to provide transportation on the Pacific, and he, with the other passengers, remained there six weeks exposed to a merciless climate and a more merciless set of inhabitants, who extorted from them in every possible way. He then shipped on a sailing vessel, the barque Ann Smith, but she was disabled in a storm, and compelled to put into Acapulco, where she was pronounced unseaworthy by the American Consul. The Monumental City with 1,700 passengers on board came into port for fresh water and provisions, and some of the passengers were permitted to land. Among them was an old man who had brought off his son's ticket, also a passenger. Mr. Brown told the old man his story, and got permission to use the extra ticket in order to get aboard the vessel, paying his last money, $10, for the privilege. He attempted to get through as a stowaway, but was finally detected by an enemy from the crew of the Ann Smith, reported to the mate, who put him in irons, chaining him to the bull wheel. The passengers protested, and he was released by the captain, who set him to heaving coal for his passage. Arriving in San Francisco, he put his case in the hands of an attorney, who libeled the ship for the wages due him, and collected $60, taking only half—an act of magnanimity which speaks well for the heart of the man, but proves him to have been no lawyer—else he would have kept it all. He worked a week on the wharves as a porter, and then went to Sacramento as a hand on a passenger steamer. He hired to drive team from Sacramento to Hangtown for $100 a month, but after working three months could not collect his pay. He then mined at Mud Springs and vicinity for a few months, and went to Yuba River, where in company with sixteen others they constructed a flume and changed the channel of the river. They mined in the river's bed for six weeks, when they lost flume and dam by a flood. Mr. B. in that time had $4,000 for his share. He returned to Sacramento, lost his money by a bank failure, and again took to driving team. To tell the ups and downs of Mr. B. in California, how he made money mining, in buying cattle and horses in Lower California, and driving them to the mines, how he lost stock by the treachery of Indians and whites, how by stampedes and accidents, how broken and dispirited by losses he would yet rise again, would require a volume. Finally in 1856, he bought a farm in Napa County, which he improved. Here on the 7th of October, 1857, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary J. Stratton. His farm was claimed under a Spanish grant, but he held it for three years, and then took 100 head of cattle and forty head of horses and established a new ranch on Eel River, paying $500 down on the land. His farm was destroyed during the winter by land slides, his cattle and horses killed and driven off by Indians, or starved to death by the terrible winter, and in the spring he had but seventeen cattle and fifteen horses left. He returned to Napa and learned that the person who claimed his land had succeeded in getting his claim confirmed to him, and Mr. B. found his splendid farm in the hands of the adverse claimant and his tenant dispossessed. He traded for a few more cattle, and with his family and herds started for the San Juan country. After great peril from Indians, he got to the mines, and in partnership with a brother-in-law opened a butcher shop. They then bought a pack train and made money. In the fall of 1864, his sister and brother-in-law returned to Ohio, with whom he sent his family, he remaining behind to make some final disposition of his remaining property. Winter set in, and he crossed the mountains on snow shoes, and returned to Ohio just in time to be drafted into the army. Hired a substitute. His father gave him a farm, which he increased by purchase, but after two years he sold out and moved to Iowa. He went into the manufacture of woolen goods, but a declining market caused a loss, and he abandoned the enterprise. However he had made money in land speculations, and in 1869, when he came to Missouri, he was still well to do. He settled in Bates County, buying two farms. He then bought a herd of Texan cattle and wintered them in Missouri, but found that that would not pay. He moved his family to Baxter Springs and went to Texas after cattle but could not sell at a profit. Discouraged, he told his wife that if he had a range to turn his cattle on he would return to Missouri. She remarked that she thought she could establish her claim to a part of the Osage lands, as she had been born on the reserve, and formerly had attended school at the Osage Mission. Taking his family to the agency, she was recognized by relatives, and Mr. B. and his family were soon enrolled as members of the tribe. The Cherokees were leaving the lands alloted to the Osages, and he bought the claim of one of the Judges of Cherokee Nation for $600. He moved his cattle into the Territory, and has since been prospering in the business. The next summer Mrs. Brown, hearing of the death of two sisters and a brother in California, she desired to visit that State. He took his family there on a visit, was pleased with the country, and decided to remain. He bought a ranch, rented a house, and was on the point of starting East for his herds when his wife suddenly sickened and died. He abandoned California, brought his little children to Ohio, and left them with his deceased brother's widow. He subsequently, on November 15, 1875, was married to this lady. After his second marriage he moved to Texas, where he lived four years. Finding small herds did not pay in that country, he returned to Kansas, locating a ranch on the Big Caney River in the Osage country. He has a farm of 450 acres improved, 30,000 acres of fenced pasture, and now has thereon over 5,000 head of cattle. During his operations in California, a company of which he was one, went on a prospecting tour to Australia, thence returned to the Chinchi Islands, Callao, crossed the Andes, descended the Amazon, ascended the Guaymas River, returned over the Andes, and thence back to California. Mr. Brown has five children by his first marriage—Alpheus H., Charles W., Rosa Isabel, Edward S. and Ernest E. There is no issue by the last union, but Mrs. Brown has three children by the former marriage.

His grandfather, Peter Salter, was a soldier in the Revolutionary army, and served under Washington in several historic engagements. His father, David N. Salter, was one of the founders of Battle Creek, Mich. The subject of this sketch went from Michigan to California, where he remained from 1850 to 1856, when he returned to Michigan, experiencing many thrilling adventures on the voyage. In 1871, Mr. Salter removed to Kansas, and located on a farm near Thayer, his selection being the northeast quarter of Section 22, Chetopa Township. The year following, he was elected trustee of the township, an office held by him for five successive years. The township had voted $35,000 to a "paper" railroad and, against all manner of denunciation, both by the parties interested and people, who believed that the railroad operators would act in good faith, he persistently refused to sign the bonds or permit their issue, resisting legal processes, and ultimately carrying the point. The wisdom of this course was soon demonstrated, and his constituents re-elected him to office. In 1872, great excitement prevailed among the settlers on the Osage ceded lands. Mr. Salter, although not resident on the lands involved, was chosen chief counsellor of the farmers, and a protective association was organized. During the agitation open outrages were committed against the farmers, and three men were seriously injured. Some of the members of the association favored retaliation, but Mr. S. addressed the exasperated people in so effective a manner that summary vengeance was averted and the law sustained. The farmers succeeded, by peaceful measures in maintaining their rights. In 1874, Mr. Salter was elected Lieutenant Governor of Kansas, and re-elected in 1876. One year later he was appointed Register of the United States Land Office at Independence, which position he still holds. He then returned to Bloomington, Ill., where he practiced law, and was identified with other interests until May 1, 1869. He then started for Kansas in a buggy, driving the entire distance, arriving at Oswego in July, and in the ensuing month of August, he, with Dr. R. W. Wright and others, organized the Independence Town Company. He drew the charter, and on August 21, 1869, they located the town-site. The corner-stone of the first building, a hotel, was laid August 28, 1869, and the hotel was opened by Mr. S. the first of the following October. He kept it one month, and then sold out to Owen Parkhurst. Mr. S. brought a small stock of merchandise to Independence before any store was started; the stock consisted of such articles as tobacco, quinine, etc., all contained in a box four by eight feet. About the same time he started a hack line between Independence and Oswego, carrying passengers and the first mail. The post office was in the crown of his hat, and when he had a call for mail, the post office was always handy for examination. The Town Company consisted of twelve men. At their first meeting nine of the twelve voted to make the streets seventy-five feet wide, and Mr. Stephenson was instructed to make the plat accordingly, but instead of obeying orders, he laid the streets off on the plat 100 feet wide, and took the responsibility on himself. Mr. G. A. Brown, one of the Company, and the surveyor, together with Mr. S., took charge of the buildings and management of the Town Company's affairs. They made a treaty with the Osages, by which they leased eight by twelve miles of country around Independence, for which they paid $300, thus saving the early settlers from being taxed from five to ten dollars by each roving band of Osages. In November, 1869, he moved to his claim, adjoining the town site on the south, and he now resides within forty rods of his original location. He gave his attention to public affairs, his professional duties being farming and stock business until 1876. He then went to Rush County, Kan., and located the town site of La Crosse in the geographical center of the county, four miles from anything but prairie; called an election; voted the county seat to La Crosse, and in the spring of 1877 sold out his interests advantageously, and returned to his family at Independence, and has remained here since that time, attending to his real estate and other interests. Webb, Clerk of the District Court, and in the fall of 1870 he was elected to the same office, but in consequence of his professional interests he resigned the office in June, 1871, at which time he had a large practice in contested land cases. ARCHIBALD A. STEWART, editor and proprietor of the Independence Kansan, was born in Champaign County, Ohio, April 23, 1836, and was reared on a farm. His father James Stewart, a man of great physical power, had the honor of having a personal set to with Jefferson C. Davis, of Confederate fame, in which he gave the latter a severe drubbing. Davis, at that time, was just fresh from West Point, and held the commission of Lieutenant at Fort Winnebago, Wis. Stewart was engaged as boat builder at that place, and one day, chancing to walk across the parade grounds, was peremptorily ordered off by Lieutenant Davis, upon whom he turned, telling him to go to h—l. Such defiance was too much for the chivalrous soldier and officer, who, confident of his abilities, thought to resent the dishonor in a physical combat. But the native agility and brawny arms of the boat builder were more than odds against the science of the West Pointer, who, worsted in the encounter, hrunk away in chagrin and mortification. The educational advantages of A. A. Stewart, he subject of this sketch, were such as were afforded by the common schools, supplemented by one year's attendance at Antioch College, subsequent to which he followed school teaching for some time. When he arrived at majority his father and mother both died, leaving upon him the charge of two younger sisters and three brothers aged seven, nine and eleven years, over whom he acted the part of a father, until the marriage of the sisters and the arrival of the brothers to manhood. The chief of his experience on the field, was in the engagements at Dutton Hill, Kenesaw Mountain, Resaca, Franklin, Nashville; in the pursuit of Gen. Morgan's raid through Indiana and Ohio; in Burnsides' campaign, in East Tennessee; in the engagements at Philadelphia and Knoxville; and in Sherman's famous Atlanta campaign. After a service in the war, of about three years, he resigned and came home, in February, 1865. In 1866, he emigrated with his family to Illinois, and in June, 1869, came to Kansas, locating on a claim in Sycamore Township, Montgomery County, and for about ten years, he was chiefly engaged in the improvement and cultivation of his land and in the breeding of fine stock; having brought the first Norman horse, Berkshire boar, and Short-horn bull into the county. At the first election in Sycamore Township, he was chosen Trustee; was president of the County Agricultural Association for two years, of which he has been a director since its organization, and was elected State Representative, in 1873, as an independent candidate, the district being Republican by a majority of 350, and he a Democrat. COFFEYVILLE.

At an early period in its history, several attempts were made to establish a town in the southeastern part of the county, nearly all of which failed of success. The first attempt was made in 1869, when a town called Clymore, named in honor of an Indian chief by that name, sprang into existence, at Lushbaugh's trading store. I. C. Crawford and Eli Dennis, in the spring of 1869, laid out a town a mile or so south of Clymore, which they christened Westralia. These places, however, gave way under the absorbing influence of a town founded by Col. Coffey and N. B. Blanton, called Coffeyville, during the fall of 1869. About a mile and a half south of Westralia, on the east side of the Verdigris, stood the town of Parker, which was started about this time, by D. T. Parker, after whom it was named, assisted by H. W. Martin and others. This town was designed to be the southern terminus of the Leavenworth, Lawrence & Galveston Railroad, then building, in consequence of which it was the chief point of attraction and outstripped, in its progress, all surrounding points. For awhile, the town enjoyed a marvelous growth, having within a single year grown to a city of more than a 1,000 inhabitants. A change, however, came across the minds of the railroad builders, who concluded to cross the Verdigris at a point a few miles above Parker, which stood upon the east side of the river, and run down on the west, instead of on the east side of that stream, as was previously the intention. In this ungenerous act upon the part of the railroad authorities, Parker read her doom. Here was a new chance presented, and, in 1871, Coffeyville, a town distinct from the one previously started under this name, was established under the favoritism of the railroad company. Being the pet of the railroad was sufficient guaranty of its success. The removal of a few houses from Parker to the place created a "stampede," and, in a short period of time, the city of Parker was completely annihilated; the greater part of it was taken to Coffeyville, and what was left became scattered in other places far and wide, and of the once flourishing city only two or three buildings are left to mark the place whereon it stood. Parker, however, for several months, fought her antagonist vigorously, but when the break was made the dyke was swept away and the resistless flood rushed through.

The present city of Coffeyville is located in the southeastern part of the county, on the west bank of the Verdigris River, about two and a half miles from the north line of the Indian Territory, and is the terminus of what is now called the Kansas City, Lawrence & Southern Kansas Railroad.

The first town of Coffeyville, now called "old town," was established about a mile south of the site of the present city bearing this name, by N. B. Blanton and Col. Coffey, for whom it was named. It, too, enjoyed a season of flattering prosperity and prospect, stimulated by the idea of being the probable railroad terminus. Being a border town, and on the cattle trail, much disorder and confusion prevailed, so much so that the main thoroughfare took the name "Red Hot street," and crime and murder were of common occurrence. But this place, too, like many others, was robbed, not only of its population, business and prospects, but, also, of the very name, by the new town which had sprung up adjoining it on the north.

For some time Coffeyville was the terminus of the southern cattle drive, to which immense herds of cattle were driven from the Territory and Texas for shipment by rail to Eastern markets. This had the effect to stimulate the business of the town, on account of the numbers and character of its floating population. Everything was in a constant "hurrah;" men were wild with excitement, and society was a chaos. The wild, reckless "cow boy" knew no restraint; gamblers plied their avocation openly, and at all times; saloon men were hurried to serve customers with liquors, and the streets resounded with the rattle of beer glasses and the clickings of the keno and billiard rooms; quarrels were frequent, and the reports of the pistol, announcing that some unfortunate man had fallen a victim to the well aimed instrument were common; dance halls, filled with lewd women of the most beastly type, lined the streets, in which revelry, debauchery and criminalities ran riot. Gambling became so common, and of such a nature, as to become a nuisance, so that, at one time, the Mayor of the city, A. B. Clark, instructed the police officers to invade the gambling dens and arrest the offenders. The next morning the "lordly magistrate" sat in judgment upon such as had been arrested for violating the laws during the past day, evening and night; but judge of his surprise to find among those arrested in compliance with his instructions, and now arraigned before him for trial, a majority of the city council.

In the face of these discouraging features, operating to drive away law abiding and peace loving settlers, the town grew like magic. The cattle trail having long since been removed farther west, society has become organized and settled, so that the town is now quiet and peaceable as any in the State, and although it has lost that which more than anything else made its early growth so rapid, viz: the cattle trade, yet, supported by a wide scope of fertile territory, she has grown to a city with a population of about fifteen hundred, and is the second best town in the county for size and commercial importance. An extensive and flourishing trade is supplied from the Indian Territory, which, perhaps, goes far toward giving Coffeyville her commercial superiority.

During the year 1872, Coffeyville became organized and incorporated under the laws of the State, as a city of the third class, and, at an election held for the purpose, the following officers were elected: A. B. Clark, Mayor; I. N. Neeld, Clerk; T. B. Eldridge, Treasurer; Luther Perkins, Police Judge; Peter Flynn, Marshall; O. D. Tallman, David Blain, G. W. Curry and Peter Wheeler, Council. Those having held the office of Mayor of the city since its organization are:—A. B. Clark, G. J. Tallman, J. Barricklow, T. B. Eldridge, W. C. Masten, J. M. Heddens and C. M. Hetherington.

A postoffice was first established at "Old" Coffeyville, in September, 1871, where it remained a few months, and was taken to the present city of Coffeyville. The first Postmaster was Col. Coffey, who kept the office in his store room. After the removal of the office, in the spring of 1872, S. B. Hickman became Postmaster, and has since then held the position.

SCHOOLS, CHURCHES, SOCIETIES, ETC.

The first school in the town was taught in the fall of 1871, by J. T. Creswell, in what is now called old town, and was kept in a store room. A very excellent and commodious school building was erected in 1872, at a cost to the city, of fifteen thousand dollars. It is a two-story brick, containing four rooms, and is very commanding in appearance. The schools have undergone thorough grading, and comprise six departments, under as many teachers. The enumeration for 1882, was 428, and the enrollment was 401, with an average daily attendance of 172, under charge of M. R. Cook, as principal.

The First Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1871, and incorporated under the law of the State in the following year, and during the year 1874, the church house was built. A suitable parsonage building is also provided; the entire church property being valued at about $1,500. The congregation has a membership of about eighty, under the pastorate of Rev. D. T. Sommerville. A Sunday school is also run, under the auspices of the church, with an average attendance of one hundred.

The Episcopal Church, or St. Paul's Church, was organized in March, 1878, by the Bishop of the Diocese, assisted by the Reverends L. L. Holden and Beatty, and was effected in the Methodist Episcopal Church, with five members. The building of a house began in the fall of 1878, the corner stone being laid December 14, and was completed in the spring of 1879, at a cost of $1,500. It is a one-story frame building, with a capacity for seating one hundred and fifty persons. The congregation, now numbering fifty members, is without a regular pastor.

The Catholics also have a small society here under charge of Father Schoils, of Independence, and are without a church building.

There are also churches among the colored population of the city.

Coffeyville has also a fair representation of local fraternities, of which there are three in prosperous existence. These are the:

Keystone Lodge, No. 102, A., F. & A. M. was established under charter, October 19, 1871, with fifteen charter members, and E. Dennis was chosen worshipful master, and Joseph McCreary, senior warden. The lodge, now numbering sixty-five members, is under the official management of Joseph McCreary, worshipful master; J. S. Lang, senior warden, and F. W. Noblett, junior warden.

Star Lodge, No. 117, I. O. O. F., was instituted May 29, 1874, with seven charter members, and T. C. Frazier was elected noble grand, O. P. Erganbright, secretary, and M. M. White, treasurer. The lodge, at present, has a membership of forty-five, and is officered as follows: G. A. W. Faust, noble grand; J. M. Hedges, treasurer, and W. R. White, secretary.

Coffeyville Lodge, No. 1,931, K. of H., became established December 10, 1879, with fifteen members. E. L. Foster was chosen dictator; George Slosson, reporter; and J. T. Isham, treasurer. There are now forty-two members and George Slosson is dictator; T. C. Frazier, reporter; and J. T. Isham, treasurer. The lodge meets in the Masonic Hall.

Castle Elberon, No. 183, Knights of the Golden Rule, was instituted November 11, 1881, with twenty members, with A. C. Keifer, commander; J. W. Glass, secretary; and W. H. Lewark, treasurer. The present officers are O. P. Erganbright, commander; J. W. Glass, secretary; W. H. Lewark, treasurer. The lodge, numbering twenty-six members, meets in the Odd Fellows' Hall. The Masons and Odd Fellows each are provided with large and comfortably furnished halls.

The Coffeyville Journal, now the only paper in operation in the place, was established October 25, 1875, by W. A. Peffer, who, in October, 1881, associated with him his two sons, W. A., jr., and D. M. Peffer. The sheet is a five-column quarto, is Republican in politics and has a circulation of 500 copies.

The Banking House of Ayres & Steel was established May 18, 1880, by T. G. Ayres and Samuel Steel, and is the only monetary institution in the city at the present time.

Since the burning of the large flouring mill, in June, 1882, the manufacturing interests of the city are confined to the less important establishments, such as wagon and carriage factories, etc. Speedy effort, however, is being made to rebuild the flour mill, and it is only a question of short time when that concern will be replaced by a larger and better one.

In the vicinity of Coffeyville are a number of manufacturing establishments of various kinds. Thayer & Gordon own a cheese factory; Barnes & Cooper, a steam saw mill; A. Montgomery a water flour mill; A. Blake, a steam fanning mill; Long & Crum, a steam corn-grinder; Morgan Brothers, a steam saw and corn-mill.

CHERRYVALE.

Cherryvale was laid off as a town site, in May, 1871, by the Kansas City, Lawrence and Southern Kansas Railway Company, and is situated in the eastern part of Montgomery County, about ten miles east of the city of Independence. The land, upon which the place is built, was originally taken as a claim, by Joseph Wise. The first building erected upon the site was the Union Hotel, built by "General" Darr. The first store was started by C. A. Clotfelter and J. P. Baldwin, consisting of general merchandise. Stanfield and Brewer had a store about a mile north of the town site, which, when the town was laid out, they moved upon the site, and in 1872, sold out to Seth Paxton. The town had made some progress up to 1873, when a fire broke out, destroying the main business part of the town. This had the effect to dishearten those of her unfortunate business men and to dampen the prospects of the town. But they were not men easily enduced to give up, and in the face of all discouragements, O. F. Carson and C. C. Kincaid began the erection of a brick business block, which was soon followed by other solid stone and brick houses. O. F. Carson began the drug business here in 1872. For some time the progress of the town was extremely slow, and, during a period of eight years, up to 1879, it had a population of only 250. During the last named year, the St. Louis, Wichita and Western Railroad was built, crossing the K. C., L. & S. K. road at this place. The narrow gauge railroad was constructed during this year, by the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad Company, leading from here to the coal fields in Cherokee County, and which was made a standard gauge road in October, 1882. It was, also, in 1879, that the K. C., L. & S. K. road was extended westward to the Arkansas River, and the piece of this road leading south to Coffeyville was afterwards operated as a branch. This gave the town a new impetus and its building became rapid as it had hitherto been slow. It now is a city numbering 1,400 inhabitants and a place of fine commercial importance, numbering many large and substantial business establishments. The place contains numerous solid brick business block and tastily constructed residences.

From a little village, in 1879, with only 250 people, Cherryvale, in about one year's time, was ready to become a city under the law, as she already was in size; and in March, 1880, pursuant to a petition signed by the citizens and presented to the court, by E. D. Hastings, was duly incorporated as a city of the third class. On the first Tuesday of April, city officers were elected as follows: C. C. Kincaid, Mayor; A. Buch, J. M. Richardson, Frank Bellchamber, J. A. Handley and A. V. McCormick, Councilmen; A. Wood, Police Judge. At the first meeting of the mayor and council, A. Phalp was appointed Treasurer, M. F. Wood, Clerk; J. C. Cunningham, Marshal, and B. F. Hinds, Street Commissioner. In the following May, Councilmen Richardson and Bellchamber moved out of the city, and, at a special election in June, N. B. Sawyer and C. P. Buffington were elected to fill the vacancies. The present city officers are: A. Phalp, Mayor; M. F. Wood, Clerk; C. C. Kincaid, Treasurer; S. P. Moore, Police Judge; J. W. C. Osborn, Marshal and Street Commissioner; E. B. Clark, C. A. Mitchell, E. D. Hastings, W. E. Martin and E. S. McDonald, Councilmen.

SCHOOLS, CHURCHES, ETC

The first school was taught in Cherryvale in the summer of 1873, by Miss Mary Greenfield. A schoolhouse was erected in 1872, and is a small two-story frame structure. This building has long since become insufficient for the accommodation of the schools, which were provided apartments in such rooms as could be had suitable for the purpose. A commodious new school building was erected in the fall of 1882, and is a fine two-story brick structure containing four large rooms, and cost about $6,000. The schools, now systematically graded, enumerate a population of 490 pupils, enrolling 354, with an average daily attendance of 204, and are superintended by G. B. Leslie, assisted by four competent teachers.

Cherryvale, also, has her quota of church organizations, as follows:

The Methodist Episcopal congregation was organized in 1871, and a regular church edifice was erected in 1880. It is a brick building of moderate dimensions, and of suitable architecture. The building was begun under the administration of Rev. William Shambaugh, and completed under that of Rev. James Murray, the present pastor of the church.

The Baptist Society was established here, on May 18, 1873, by Rev. J. R. Baldwin, with eight members, and was effected in the schoolhouse, in which the early services were held, until the removal to the Opera Hall. The congregation, numbering thirty-two members, is under the charge of Rev. Mr. Johnson.

The First Presbyterian Church was organized December 11, 1881. First meetings were held at Opera House, and the congregation continued to worship there until January 1, 1883, then moved into their new church edifice, which has been constructed at a cost of $2,700. Present indebtedness only $400. It is one of the best church buildings in Southern Kansas belonging to the Presbyterian denomination. Original membership twenty-four; present membership fifty. They have a well attended Sunday school, average attendance being fifty. First pastor, Rev. W. B. Truax, remained from December, 1881, to April, 1882; succeeded by present pastor, Rev. S. W. Griffin. To the personal efforts of C. L. Berry and Rev. W. B. Truax may be attributed the successful organization of the First Presbyterian Church of Cherryvale. The present officers of the church are: C. L. The Cherryvale Globe was established and the first issue made August 3, 1878, by Pratt & Buffington. In about a year Pratt sold out his interest to Buffington. This change took place in September, 1879, and in the latter part of December the establishment was burned up. The citizens, realizing their loss in being without a paper, lent their aid and influence towards its re-establishment, and, in April of the next year, the paper was resurrected from the dust and ashes of the conflagration, by Buffington & Rambo. For awhile, until the material and press and everything was in shape, the paper was printed at Kansas City. In November, 1880, T. C. Copeland bought Rambo's interest, who, in turn, soon disposed of his part of the concern to C. T. Ewing. Another change was soon made, and in May, 1881, the Globe Publishing Company was formed, composed of C. P. Buffington, J. D. Hinkle and J. J. Chatham, and on February 10, 1882, became the sole possession of J. D. Hinkle, and was subsequently united with the Cherryvale News, edited and published by S. P. Moore & Son, the new paper being called the Globe News, and is now in successful operation.

The first issue of the Cherryvale Torch was made in February, 1882, by C. P. Buffington and T. C. Copeland. After running about three months, Buffington sold his share to C. T. Ewing, who, in September, 1882, bought Copeland's interest also, and became sole proprietor, and employed A. S. Duley as editor and manager of the paper.

Cherryvale Lodge, No. 137, A., F. & A. M., was instituted October 16, 1873, with thirteen charter members. The officers elected were: O. F. Carson, worshipful master; Seth Paxton, senior warden and J. C. Breckenridge, junior warden. The present membership is fifty-five. The present officers are: O. F. Carson, worshipful master; M. L. Buffington was chosen past master workman; C. C. Thompson, master workman; S. L. Gibson, overseer; A. D. Smith, foreman; A. K. Cain, recorder; and J. P. Baker, receiver.

The Cherryvale Opera House Company was organized and incorporated as a joint stock company in September, 1880, with J. W. Willis, president; E. B. Clark, secretary; and O. F. Carson, treasurer. A large one-story frame opera hall was constructed, and is used as an opera and town hall, and also for school purposes.

Bank.—A banking house was established here, in the spring of 1880, by C. T. Ewing, he being president of the institution, and C. A. Mitchell, cashier. A bank building was erected in the fall of 1881, and is a substantial two-story brick structure, suitably arranged for banking purposes.

Besides the usual smaller factories as are common to small cities, such as wagon making, etc., Cherryvale has only one manufacturing establishment of importance, and that is, the flouring mill, which was established here in 1873 by a man named Dodd. The mill contains four run of buhrs, and has a capacity for grinding 200 bushels of wheat and 100 of corn per day. The building is sixty feet long by thirty wide, and is two stories high. The establishment, after changing hands several times, is now owned by A. Buch, and does a flourishing business.

ELK CITY.

Of the many cities whose rise and fall, or ultimate success are recorded in the history of Montgomery County, Elk City was the first to become established. It is situated in the northwestern part of the county, on the line of the K. C., L. & S. K. R. R., about 175 miles southwest of Kansas City, and in the valley of the Elk River, at the mouth of Duck Creek.

The town is surrounded by a large territory of excellent and productive valley land—the Elk Valley being noted for the superior excellence and fertility of its soil—from which a large and prosperous trade is derived.

Early in 1868, John Kappel established a trading post here, on the land which he afterward entered and deeded as a claim. Shortly after this date, and in December, 1868, the idea of starting a town, at this point, was conceived, and for the furtherance of the project, a town company was organized, of which A. H. Baird was chairman, and Dr. Miller was secretary. The company selected Kappel's claim, at the confluence of Duck Creek with Elk River, as the town site, as affording the most favorable and desirable location. Besides Kappel's trading post, the next business started in the town was that by A. E. Baird, in a log building, consisting of general stock, and the next was M. D. Wright, who, in 1870, began selling stationery, notions, etc., in a little log building, the upper part of which he occupied as living apartments, carrying on his business on the ground floor, having brought his goods with him in a covered wagon, when he migrated thither.

Among the earliest to establish in business in the town, was A. R. Quigg, who engaged in the hardware trade, which he still follows. Kappel's old trading store, after having undergone overhauling, with new front, etc., forms the room now occupied by Watts & Masterman's furniture store.

In 1869, S. B. Davis, T. J. Brown and Samuel Maples built the first saw mill at the place. The first blacksmith shop was built by J. P. Morgan, in 1870. During the years of 1869–70, the stream of emigration poured at its height, and the population of the town had largely increased, so that as early as the spring of 1871, it had attained the necessary proportions, and was ready to assume the dignity of a city of the third class. Since that time, the growth of the city has been moderate and of a substantial and healthy character, and at present it has a population of 500. The city is experiencing a revival of progress and improvement, several large brick business rooms, a commodious brick hotel and school building having been erected during the present season.

The first death within the limits of the city, was that of Thomas Hammond, who was shot and killed by a man named Morrison. The difficulty had arisen some time previously, concerning a plow, and a rehearsal of this resulted as above, when Morrison fled the country.

The first child born was Willie Hammond, son of Thomas and Bertha Hammond, in April, 1869 and who was killed during the same month, at the disaster at the Elk City flood.

Although Elk City afterward proved a successful attempt as an enterprise of town building, her beginning was made in the midst of spirited rivalry. Bloomfield, about a mile northeast, and Tipton a little way east of the town, were established, and sought to win in the race for supremacy. But Elk City took the lead, outstripping these two places, which it afterward wholly absorbed, the latter being now a "city of the dead," the site being occupied as a cemetery, and of the former, not a vestige remains to mark the solitary grounds upon which stood the embryo city. Each of these places, during its existence, contained some eight or ten dwellings, a dry goods, drug and grocery stores.

The railroad was constructed to Elk City in 1879, and was of much advantage in stimulating its improvement and growth.

As before stated, the tide of emigration was at its flood during the years of 1869 and 1870. This, besides filling up the country with a numerous farming population, even, in greater ratio, also stimulated and built up the towns. Elk City coming in for her share, was ready in a little more than two years from its incipiency, having attained the requisite legal population to become organized as a city of the third class. The town, therefore, became duly and legally incorporated in the spring of 1871, and Herbert Prentiss was elected Mayor, James Smith, Police Judge, and Uri Coy, J. Baldwin, Whig Southard, W. W. Woodring and A. R. Quigg, members of the City Council. Prentiss resigned the office of Mayor before the expiration of the term, and was succeeded by Uri Coy. The present city officials are: Samuel Weston, Mayor; A. J. Garrison, Clerk; S. N. West, Treasurer; H. H. Burdick, Police Judge; W. Aldridge, Marshal, and W. Mussen, H. Woodring, M. P. Freely, A. J. Garrison and S. N. West, members of the City Council.

A postoffice was established at Elk City in 1870, and William Henry Harrison Southard, or for short, as he was called, "Whig" Southard, held the commission as Postmaster, the office being kept in Osa Sherman's store. About a year after, A. J. Clark succeeded to the position, who, in about another year's time, gave way to M. D. Wright, who has since continued in the capacity of Postmaster, the office being kept in his stationery and notion store.

SCHOOLS AND OTHER LOCAL MATTERS.

The first public school was taught in the town by William Osborne, in 1869, and was kept in a log house belonging to a man named Chandler. In this place, and in the building erected by Thomas Harris for a hotel, the schools were held until the completion of the regular school building. The work of erecting a schoolhouse began in 1871, and by the month of January, 1872, was completed, and was 26x40 feet in dimensions, one story frame. This building served the schools, in a cramped condition, until the fall of 1882, when a commodious new school building was erected. The house is a two-story brick, containing four rooms, being 33x63 feet in size, in the main, with appropriate and artistic wings and projections, and was built at a cost to the district, when completed, of nearly $4,000, for the payment of which, in part, bonds were issued by the city to the amount of $2,375.

During the early part of the year 1882, the schools, numbering 218 pupils, underwent a sort of grading or division, and were made to comprise the primary, intermediate and grammar school departments, which, respectively, were under the charge of Miss Ella Perkins, Miss McDowell and A. C. Sewell, each of whom were generally regarded as teachers of superior efficiency, and under whose management the schools experienced a degree of prosperity never before equalled.

The city contains, among her institutions several church organizations, by which is indexed the moral and Christian sentiment cherished among the majority of the citizens.

The first sermon preached in the place was delivered by the Rev. Smith Gossett, of the denomination of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in 1869.

The Primitive Baptist Church was established on the first Saturday of September 1869, by the Rev. M. F. Hedges, at the residence of W. W. Woodring, then about a mile and a half southeast of town, with a membership of nine. Meetings were held at residences and schoolhouses until in 1882, when they conducted worship in the Presbyterian Church. The present membership is fourteen, under charge of Rev. J. T. Swinney.

The Missionary Baptist Church was organized in November, 1869, by Rev. John Roe, at the residence of T. J. Brock, about two miles south of the town, with eleven members. This body, also, worshiped in private houses and in school buildings until in 1882, at which time they purchased the old school building in the city, which, undergoing remodeling and repairing, was fitted up as a place of worship. The congregation, now numbering twenty-six members, is under the pastorate of Rev. W. Gable.

The Methodist Episcopal Church became established in 1871, under the supervision of Rev. Samuel Lampman. The congregation, having no church building, then, as now, was compelled to shift about for a place of holding meetings, as necessity demanded, and at present occupy the Presbyterian Church, and is ministered to by Rev. Mr. Bennett.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was instituted, at Elk City, in 1873, by Rev. Mr. McClure. The work of organization took place in the school building, and was effected with fourteen members. Services were held in the schoolhouse until the Presbyterian Church was completed, and were then conducted in that building. Rev. Mr. Harris is the present pastor.

The Disciple's Church was formed on the first Sunday of March, 1882. Elder W. M. Babbitt was chiefly instrumental in effecting the work, which took place in the school building, at Elk City, with a total of twenty members. Meetings are now conducted in the Presbyterian Church, by Mr. Babbitt.

The Presbyterian Church was organized in 1880, through the efforts of Rev. Sidney Allen, a noted pioneer minister and physician. A church house was built, during the early part of that year, and dedicated on the 4th of July. The building is a one-story stone structure, and serves numerous other congregations of the city for church purposes. The congregation has thirty-five members, and was under charge of Mr. Allen until recently, when he was succeeded by Rev. E. B. Evans as pastor.

Nowhere, perhaps, does social order attain greater perfection and fraternal feeling higher cultivation than in this little city. Her quota of lodges and social fraternities clearly demonstrates this fact; not alone in the comparative number of these, but, also, in the vigorous spirit with which they are conducted and the prosperity they enjoy.

Carson Lodge, No. 132, A., F. & A. M., was instituted under a dispensation, in November, 1871, and chartered October 7, 1873, with thirteen charter members. The first officers were J. W. Bell, worshipful master; J. P. Swatzell, secretary, and G. T. Sherman, treasurer. The lodge, since the beginning, has enjoyed a high degree of prosperity, and now has a membership of fifty-four, with W. S. Hough, as worshipful master; S. S. Benson, secretary, and W. W. Woodring, treasurer.

William Penn Lodge, No. 78, I. O. O. F. became organized under a dispensation, August 29, 1871. The work of institution was under the direction of Isaac Sharp, special deputy grand master, and Samuel F. Burdett, special deputy grand secretary. The order began with five members, and Whig Southard was chosen noble grand, and E. T. Walker, secretary. The present officers of the Lodge, which now numbers a membership of thirty-two, are: S. S. Benson, noble grand; L. Kniffen, vice grand; T. J. White, secretary; G. W. Kniffen, treasurer, and W. W. Woodring, sitting past grand.

Enterprise Lodge, No. 2078, K of H., was instituted by D. G. Himrod, of Chanute, Kan., as special deputy, on the 11th of February, 1880, with twenty-two charter members. Those first elected as officers were: J. W. Simpson, dictator; S. B. Davis, secretary; Joseph Robbins, treasurer. This order, however, only enjoyed a brief existence, having become disorganized in the spring of 1882.

Elk City Lodge, No. 106, A. O. U. W., was organized August 4, 1882, by D. M. Legg, who was specially deputized for this purpose. Officers to take charge of the order were then chosen as follows: F. W. Baker, master workman; William Stewart, foreman; William Wright, receiver, and E. C. Rogers, financier. These flourishing fraternities all hold their meetings in the same hall, at different times.

Three attempts have been made toward the publication of a newspaper at Elk City. The last of these was made during the summer of 1882, in the publication of a paper called the Elk City Globe, by W. C. Gettys, the first issue of which appeared on the 28th of July. The paper is a six-column folio in size, neutral in politics, and has a circulation of three hundred copies.

The only strictly monetary institution in the place is the Elk City banking house, which was established in March, 1881, by F. E. Turner, who for some time was engaged in mercantile pursuits, which he gave up to begin banking. This institution is provided with a vault of solid masonry, with Diebold entrance, in which is a Hall's best time lock safe.

The only manufacturing establishments of importance at this place are the saw-mill, established in 1869, by S. B. Davis & Co., and the Elk City flouring mill, owned by Wright & Musson. This establishment does a large and successful business, and sustains a high reputation for the excellence of its work and the honorable dealing of its proprietors.

There is also a brick yard here, in successful operation, by Price & Woodring, from which there was manufactured, during the season, about 600,000 brick, for the supply of building material to the city, and for which there was a pressing demand, during the summer, by reason of the many buildings being constructed, both as public buildings, business houses and residences. Besides these are other smaller factories, such as wagon shops, etc. A manufactory for the making of the Double Spiral Bed Springs, is operated by William Stewart, who owns the State right of this patent, for both its manufacture and sale.

PARKER CITY.

In the fall of 1869, the town of Parker became established on the east side of the Verdigris, about one and a half miles south of Clymore, by H. N. Martin and Col. D. T. Parker, after whom it was named. The reasons upon which the town was started were occasioned from the idea which at the time became current, that the railroad would run down on the east side of the river and that, probably, this would be the terminal point. So popular did this idea become, that all eyes became turned to Parker, and other towns removed thither; even Westralia, which had previously swallowed up other villages, was now in turn forced to yield to Parker, to which place it was taken during the fall of 1869. Everything at this time spoke favorably for the stability and future prominence of the town. So great, indeed, were the surrounding influences that, in little more than a year's time, it had become a city containing more than a thousand people, and about fifty flourishing business establishments. In 1871, it was incorporated as a city, and W. Barricklow was elected Mayor; A. D. Keifer, City Clerk; S. S. Peterson, Marshal, and George Hall, T.C. Frazier Dr. Dunwell, F. B. York and John Todd, Councilmen. The first white settler, to locate on the town site was Peter Miller. The first building erected was the office occupied by D. T. Parker and F. B. York, and the first school district organized in the county was at this place in 1870.

But alas! for Parker, the inscrutable ways of railroad corporations were stronger than she was able to combat. Under the instruction and direction of the Kansas City, Lawrence and Southern Kansas Railroad Company a town was started a few miles north and on the opposite side of the river from where Parker was located, where the road was to be built, and which was to be made the terminus of the road, and was called Coffeyville, a history of which appears at another place. This, as a matter of course, settled the question as to where the terminal point of the railroad should be, and made certain the conclusion that Coffeyville was destined to be the metropolis of southeastern Montgomery County. In the face of these overpowering circumstances, Parker fought bravely for a few months for existence, against her favored rival; but the removal of a few of her business houses to Coffeyville created a panic that was not to be stayed, and the prosperous little city melted away like a mirage, only a few dwellings being left as landmarks. An addition to these remains has recently been made in the erection of a brick school building and the establishment of a mercantile house by William Padon, in the spring of 1882.

LIBERTY.

Liberty became established through the combined efforts of Verdigris and Montgomery cities, in the fall of 1869. These places, seeing their impotence to contend singly with Independence in the county seat contest, in the November election of that year, concluded to unite their forces upon a single point. For this purpose Liberty was started, and was situated on the Verdigris River, about six miles south of Independence. For a time it was made the county seat, but which it lost in May, 1870, when it was removed to Independence. When the K.C.,L.& S.K. Railroad was built, it ran a few miles to the east of the town, which was soon moved to the railroad, and is the village of Liberty to-day, containing a few stores and dwellings, a schoolhouse and a church edifice.

A flouring mill, belonging to Daniel McTaggart, is also located at Liberty. This is a large stone building, and has a capacity for grinding 300 bushels of wheat and 150 bushels of corn daily. The mill is located on the Verdigris River, from which the power is derived, was built in 1875, and represents an investment of $14,000. There is also a cotton gin connected with the mill, in which there was ginned, during the year 1881, about one hundred bales of cotton. About two miles below McTaggart's mill, on the Verdigris, is the flouring mill, owned by W. H. Linton. It is propelled by water power taken from the Verdigris River, and is valued at about $8,000.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

CAPTAIN J. H. CONRAD, owner of Prairie Valley Farm, P. O. Liberty, was born in Harrison County, Ind., August 1, 1836, and was reared and educated there. In 1856—and while he was engaged in a literary course of study, at Hartsville Academy, Indiana—he came to Kansas and located a claim in Linn County, and engaged at teaching; but when the party troubles began, enlisted his sympathies and his services with the Anti-slavery party, and continued in active service in the rank and file of that party till 1859, after which he went to California; but soon after went to Nevada, where he was engaged in mining actively, there till 1863, when he again showed his loyalty to the anti-slavery principles, and returned to Indiana, raised and organized Company D, Thirteenth Indiana Volunteer Cavalry; was commissioned Captain, by Gov. Morton, and worked actively in that incumbency till the end of the war, when he was honorably discharged. In 1868, he started for California, but upon arriving in Kansas, he concluded to locate here. He married in 1866, in Harrison Co., Ind., Miss Mary Huston, a native of Ohio, who departed this life in 1872, in full connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church. She is buried in Liberty Cemetery, leaving one son, Horace Greeley. In 1874, he married Miss Kate Lykins, of Indiana. They have one son and daughter, Roscoe Conkling and Nellie Grant. Mrs. Conrad is a member of the Christian Church. In politics, Capt. Conrad is a Republican of the Stalwart school. He is an active member of the G. A. R., McPherson Post, Independence. Prairie Valley Farm contains 160 acres of valuable land, and is located three miles northeast of Liberty; eighty acres of it is used for grain tilling, and the balance is pasture and timber, among which are a fine collection of handsome forest trees. Good buildings are located on the farm, and an orchard of a well assorted variety of fruit trees. Located upon the farm is a handsome grove of a nice variety of forest trees, which is used for pic nicking parties, open air meetings, etc., called after the name of the farm, "Prairie Valley Grove."

THOMAS HAYDEN, farmer, P. O. Independence, is a native of Barnesville, Belmont Co., Ohio, born August 18, 1832, but lived in Monroe, Ohio, from 1833 to March, 1880, when he located in Liberty Township, Montgomery County, Kas., where he has followed farming, having been engaged in the same pursuits in his native State. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was first married at Woodsfield, Monroe Co., Ohio, October 3, 1855, to Mary E. Ford, a native of that place. She died in November, 1875, leaving six children—Stephen F., Forrest F., William O., John H., Thaddeus S. and Matilda D. Mr. Hayden was married to his present wife, Martha J. McCarty, at Bellsville, Ohio, June 22, 1879. She is a native of Washington County, Pa.

HON. DANIEL McTAGGART, proprietor of flouring mills, cotton gin, etc., is a native of the Parish of De Henrysville, Canada East, born August 2, 1840; lived in Rock County, Wis., from 1851 to 1852, then in Chickasaw County, Iowa, until July 8, 1861, when he enlisted as a private in Company B, Seventh Iowa Volunteer Infantry, serving in that regiment until January, 1863, being Sergeant of his company, when he was mustered out. He immediately recruited a company of colored troops at Pulaski, Tenn., being commissioned Captain of Company B, Third Alabama Colored Infantry, it being changed three months later to the One Hundred and Eleventh United States Colored Infantry, he continued in command of the company until he was mustered out May 3, 1866. The story of his military career is a very thrilling one. At the battle of Belmont, November 7, 1861, he was captured by the rebels, and was imprisoned at Memphis, Tenn; about the first of March, 1862, he made his escape, but was recaptured seven days later, having had but two meals and some roasted corn during that time. After twenty-seven day's spent in a dark dungeon at Jackson, Tenn., he was removed to Corinth, escaping from there six hours after his arrival, he reached the Union Army, distant thirty miles, after three days' travel. He was again taken prisoner October 7, 1862, at battle of Corinth, but successfully escaped after two days and one night a prisoner. At Athens, Ala., October, 1864, he was again captured, attempted to escape the first night, but was not successful in effecting his escape until the next night, reaching the Federal lines within a few hours, he guided the course of the Union troops so that Athens was recaptured by our army within two or three days. During the summer of 1865, he was Provost Marshal at Murfreesboro, Tenn., and assisted to make the National Cemetery at that place. He then superintended the arrangement and construction of the National Cemetery at Nashville, and had charge thereof for a period of two years, afterward appointed to superintend and lay out the National Cemetery at New Albany, Ind., finally leaving the Government service January 1, 1869. Having become accustomed to the Southern climate, he determined to locate in Southern Kansas, rather than reside where he would be exposed to the cold and bleak winters so common in the States further north. In February, 1861, he located on Osage Indian lands, on Section 11, Township 33, Range 16. He now resides on Section 14, adjoining the section where he first settled. In May, 1869, he put up a store about three miles east of the farm; in the following month he built a store at Verdigris City, and carried on both stores for about one year; he then consolidated his mercantile interest and located at Liberty, continuing in trade there till 1872, then moved to the present town of Liberty, two and a half miles distant from the old town, remaining there until 1876, doing nearly all the merchandising at that point, also serving as Postmaster and express agent all the time, and railroad agent from 1872 to 1875. He was the first County Treasurer, being appointed to the office. In November, 1882, he was elected a member of the Kansas House of Representatives, proving to be a valuable and efficient member thereof. Captain McTaggart has evinced such ability and uprightness in his public life as to make his influence potently felt. From the fall of 1869 to the present time, he has owned and lived on the farm where he now resides. In 1875, he erected his flouring mills, capacity sixty barrels per day, on the Verdigris River, near his residence; in 1880, he put up a cotton gin. He estimates that 150 bales of cotton were produced in Montgomery County in 1882. For the last three years he has supplied the Osage Indians, in the Territory, with their flour. The balance of the product of his mills finds sale in the markets of this county. The Captain was elected member of the Legislature in 1882, on the Republican ticket, by a majority of 300. At the same election, George W. Glick, the Democratic candidate for Governor, received a majority of 200. This vote indicated the personal popularity of Capt. McTaggart among his old associates and acquaintances. He was married at Murfreesboro, Tenn., June 4, 1866, to Maggie A. Beigle, a native of Altoona, Pa. They have four children—Hattie, William, Alton Charles and Claude D. The oldest was born at New Albany, Ind., the other three being native born Kansans.

ROBERT D. REESE, owner of Lake Farm, P. O. Liberty, was born in Wales, April 29, 1830, and came to America from England in 1850, whither he had spent a few years. He was reared to the mining business, in his native place, and was identified successfully with that industry in this country for over seventeen years after his arrival, principally in Pennsylvania, California, Nevada, and Colorado. In 1869 he came to Kansas, and located upon his present place, which he has improved from a raw prairie to its present handsome condition. Lake Farm contains 312 acres of valuable land; is located about a mile southwest of Liberty; 200 acres of it is devoted to grain tillage, and the balance is utilized for pasturage and timber, the latter of which boasts many very handsome forest trees. Good dwelling and barns and stables are located upon it, and an orchard of a nicely assorted variety of fruit trees. In stock, Mr. Reese deals particularly in Durham cattle, and Berkshire and Poland-China hogs. Situated on the farm is a beautiful lake ("Liberty Lake") which is abundantly stocked with a fine variety of fish; thus making Lake Farm one of the most completely improved farms in this section of country. Mr. Reese married in Wisconsin, in 1860, Miss Betty DeFuy, a lady of excellent attainments. She is of Scotch Irish ancestry. They have a very intelligent family of two sons and one daughter—Volney, a student in civil engineering; Maggie, a teacher and student in scientific course; and Robert, jr., at present a student at the public schools. Mr. Reese has been an active member of the Masonic Order for several years. He has worked very actively in the development of the social and industrial life of this locality since coming here.

H. C. VEATCH, farmer and stock raiser, P. O. Parker, was born in Pickaway County, Ohio, September 19, 1834. In 1855 went to Livingston County, Ill., and lived there till 1868, when he came to Kansas, and located near Baxter Springs, and in 1871 came here. He married, in 1859, Catherine Zuck, born in Pennsylvania, and reared in Indiana. They have five sons and one daughter—Albert C., Thomas H., Burton, James, Minnie, and Emory. His farm contains 160 acres of good land, is well fenced and watered and stocked; has good buildings, and an orchard of five acres of a nicely assorted variety of fruits.

VILLAGES.

Numerous towns took form of existence within the county during its early history, whose brief, yet hopeful lives, and subsequent disappointment and downfall must be recorded. Among these were several towns that were started in the southeastern part of the county, under the impression that somewhere in that section would be the terminus of the railroad, soon to be constructed, and with the hope of being the terminal town, the foundations of various places were laid, changed or abandoned.

Claymore, so named in honor of the Osage chief by that name, was laid out in the winter of 1868-69, at the site of Lushbaugh's trading post, under the auspices of a town company, of which G. L. Canada was chairman and Alexander Duncan secretary. For a time the town grew rapidly and reached a population of about one hundred, but a check was thrown upon its prosperity, and in the spring of 1869 it hopelessly died out.

Westralia, located two miles south of Claymore by Captain J. C. Crawford and Eli Dennis, was named for the west trail upon which it was situated. This place, on account perhaps of its being nearer the Territory, outrivaled Claymore, which it took in almost bodily, and during its short life grew with surprising rapidity, attaining a population of several hundred and became a prosperous business point.

Verdigris City was begun under this influence by Daniel McTaggart and others, in May, 1869; and was situated on the east bank of the Verdigris, a few miles south of Independence. This place at one time had fair prospect of obtaining the end aimed at, for it was made the county seat by the appointment of the Governor, on June 3, 1869. A log court house was built and the town flourished for a time, but the county seat was taken elsewhere and the village went down, and the ground upon which it stood is now owned as a farm, by E. M. Wark.

Morgan City was located by the Morgan brothers, in the summer of 1869, and stood about two and a half miles northeast of Independence, by which it was overpowered and forced to yield in a few months after it was started.

Montgomery City was started by R. W. Dunlap, at the mouth of Drum Creek, and on the Verdigris River, a few miles southeast of Independence, during 1869. This place, too, before it had yet time to attain to any importance, was forced to yield to the supremacy of Independence.

Radical City, about six miles northwest of Independence, was founded in 1869, by Col. Samuel Young, and is but a mere country trading point.

Havana started in 1869, Callow & Myers opened a store of general merchandise, and were succeeded in the business by Lines & Caufman.

Caney began existence in 1869, M. Bell starting the first business house. This place at one time became quite a village. In 1879, the place was raided by a band of robbers from the Territory. Four men, heavily armed and mounted on horseback, came into the town in broad daylight and completely sacked it. H. C. Kirkpatrick, one of the citizens, was shot and killed. In a few months afterward one of the band, James Baker by name, was found by some Cherokee Indians, who brought him to Coffeyville. He had been shot in several places, and after having had two limbs amputated by the surgeons, died the next day from the effects of his wounds. Another of the party named Triplett, was captured by a Cherokee Indian who gave him up to the authorities, and upon conviction he was sent to the penitentiary to await execution. This village, also, suffered from rivalry by Evansville in the Indian Territory and St. Paul, in Chautauqua County, and now contains three stores, a hotel, two blacksmith shops and a millinery and dressmaking establishment.

Tipton was started in 1868, a little way east of Elk City, to which it was forced to surrender.

Bloomfield, also, a short distance northeast of Elk City, was established about the same time and was forced to succumb under the pressure of the same circumstances.

The general surface of the land in the county is gently undulating, eighty per cent being upland, twenty per cent bottom, one per cent timber land. Limestone and sandstone are found throughout the county; gypsum and pottery clay exist in small quantities. and there are some traces of coal.

The timber on the streams is quite meager, but there is quite an acreage of artificial timber. Several groves have been planted, and claims have been taken under the "timber act."

The Walnut is the main stream, passing nearly centrally through the county from east to west. Otter Creek and Old Maid's Creek are its southern tributaries; Sand Creek is its northern one. The Smoky Hill River touches its northern boundary about the range line between Ranges 17 and 18, and here it receives the Big Timber Creek, which waters the northwestern part of the county.

COWLEY COUNTY.

LOCATION, TOPOGRAPHY, ETC.

COWLEY County takes its name from Matthew Cowley, First Lieutenant in Company I, Ninth Kansas Cavalry, who died in service at Little Rock, Ark., in August, 1864. It was carved out of Hunter County by the Legislature of 1867, which defined it as running thirty three miles north from a point on the south line of the State, 105 miles west of the State line, and extending thirty-four and a half miles west. At this time, the county was comprised in the "thirty mile strip," or Diminished Osage Reserve, and the three mile strip on the south line which had been reserved as a pathway for the Cherokees on their hunting trips to their more western possessions. The great Osage trail ran east and west across the county, entering at the Flint hills on the east, crossing the Grouse about two miles above Dexter, the Walnut at Winfield, and the Arkansas at the mouth of the Ninnescah. The villages of the tribe were at the latter crossing and on Timber Creek, a short distance above Winfield.

The county has an exceptionally large amount of bottom land, 33 per cent of the whole surface being of that character. Forest occupies 6 per cent, and open prairie 94 per cent. The principal stream is the Arkansas, which runs southeast across the southwest corner of the county, and receives the waters of almost all the minor streams, including the Walnut. Other large streams are the Walnut, Beaver and Grouse, all running in a southerly direction. Each of these has a considerable width of bottom; the Walnut two miles, Grouse, Dutch and Rock Creek one mile each. The principal timber belts are found on the rivers; the Arkansas having a strip one mile in width; the Walnut and Grouse a quarter mile each and Timber and Rock Creek one-eighth of a mile. The varieties found in these belts are cottonwood, sycamore, walnut, oak and hackberry.

It need hardly be said that with these principal streams and a host of smaller tributaries, the county is well watered. Add to this the fact that pure, clear water is readily obtained at a depth of from fifteen to twenty-five feet east of the Walnut, and at from twenty-five to forty feet west of that river, and the exceptional good fortune of the county is apparent.

There are few counties in Southern Kansas which do not yield stone of some fair quality. In many sandstone predominates, and in others a bastard stone, half sand and half lime, is quarried. In none is there a finer quality than the pure magnesian limestone, which seems to underlie the whole of this county. This stone has the peculiar property of being so soft when first unearthed as to admit of sawing into any desired shape with an ordinary hand saw, but of becoming extremely hard after a brief exposure to the air.

Many attempts have been made to discover paying coal veins, but have been thus far unsuccessful.

In April, 1872, a petition asking for the enforcement of the herd law was very numerously signed and presented to the County Commissioners, who ordered that it should be enforced from May 4 of that year. No effort has since been made to set aside this order, though it has been generally objected to by the stockmen.

In 1880, the prohibitory amendment to the constitution received a large majority of the votes cast in this county.

EARLY HISTORY.

N J. Thompson was, unwittingly, the first settler in Cowley County, having built a cabin near what he supposed the south line of Butler, in August, 1868. The survey showed him to be in Cowley County. Cowley County was as yet Indian land and all whites were intruders, yet, as it was evident that the land would soon be ceded, many attracted by the report of rich lands and ample timber and water, crossed the south line of Butler and took claims along the streams. In 1869, T. B. Ross and sons, James Renfro and sons, John and Joseph Stansbury, B. F. Murphy, T. A. Blanchard, S. B. Williams and F. W. Schwantes took claims on the bottoms of the Walnut a few miles above Winfield. In June, 1869, C. M. Wood penetrated as far as the west bank of the Walnut, nearly opposite the present city, and began selling goods to the Indians and settlers. The Indian greed for finery and provisions, and the knowledge that the tenure of the whites was insecure, soon led to a system of pilfering and intimidation that caused Wood to leave his stockade store and retreat to the Renfro cabin up the stream. In August all settlers were warned to leave the county, and all but Judge T. B. Ross did so. In June, 1869, P. Y.

Becker put up a cabin two miles south of Winfield, and E. C. Manning took the claim which was later a part of the town site.

Although the Osages had threatened the settlers and driven them out they did little more than burn Wood's stockade, and in September the settlers began to drift back, bringing fresh accessions with them. Among those who came at this time were C. M. Wood, Prettyman Knowles, James H. Land, J. C. Monforte, W. G. Graham and others. In December of the same year, W. W. Andrews, H. C. Loomis, A. Meanor, A. Howland and Joel Mack took claims near Manning's, who, the same month, opened a store in his log cabin. In January, 1870, a party of fifteen men, consisting of Thomas, John and William Coates, Joseph Reynolds, Gilbert Branson, Henry Branson, Winton, I. H. and O. J. Phenis, H. Haywood, L. B. Bullington, T. J. Raybell, D. T. Walters, S. S. Severson and John Nichols took claims along the Grouse. In the same month, the members of the Walnut City Town Company (organized in Emporia to lay out and push the town which should be the future center of the county), reached Winfield and camped near the present iron bridge. Their purpose was to locate at the junction of the Arkansas and Walnut, which the crude maps of the day showed to be near the center of the county. When the real lay of the land was ascertained, they took five claims near where Winfield stands, and then proceeded to hunt up the point of confluence. This was, of course, found near the present site of Arkansas City and the settlers, giving up their Winfield claims, settled below and started their town. All this time, the settlers who were on Indian land had paid head-money, similar to that now exacted in the Indian Territory, to Chetopa, the Osage chief. On July 15, 1870, the Osage lands were opened for settlement and bona fide claims were at once entered.

Every old settler of Kansas has a store of anecdotes concerning the few months in 1874 and 1875, which have come to be known as grasshopper years. These anecdotes are as much the "folk lore" of Kansas as those of Uncle Remus of the lands of the South. Their relation would, however, be out of place here and we leave them to the pen of some one of a vivid imagination and not too close adherence to the unvarnished facts which form the basis of history. Their advent took place in August, 1874, the swarm coming from the northwest in such countless numbers as to form a cloud which obscured the sun. Dropping down upon the scanty fields which the drought had left, they made, what it seemed hardly probable the settlers would do afterward, a hearty meal, deposited their eggs and left the county. Everything green was ravaged, the only crops saved being a few fields of corn which had been planted so early as to be already matured. Early the following season, the eggs hatched out and the fears of the settlers were renewed, but the young hoppers left the county without inflicting any damage. It would be difficult to estimate the damage done by this incursion. The newer settlers were already discouraged by the scanty rains of 1874 and the meager crops which were about to reward their hard labor, and when they saw all destroyed, they abandoned their claims by hundreds and left not only the county, but the State. Early in 1874, the population of the county was in round numbers 10,000; a year later it had fallen far below that figure, and it was not until two years later that it again reached that point.

From this time the county gained rapidly in population, and in 1879 had an enumeration of 21,549. With 1880 came a disastrous drought, which entailed great suffering among all classes, and particularly among those who were planting their first crops. Another exodus was the result of this loss, and the population diminished about 2,000. The crops of 1881 were fair and those of 1882 were exceptionally good, and although no recent enumeration has been made the loss has probably been more than overcome, although the Assessor's figures for 1882 give only 20,500. This is an increase over that taken in the same way in 1880, although less than the National census figure of that year.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION, ELECTIONS AND OFFICIAL ROSTER.

Cowley County was organized on February 28, 1870, by the appointment by Gov. Harvey of three Special County Commissioners and a Special County Clerk. A copy of the document which effected this organization is found on the first page of the County Commissioners' journal, and gives the reasons for the act. These were, briefly, that a census had been taken and the county found to contain upward of 600 inhabitants, and that a petition signed by more than twenty bona fide inhabitants, citizens of the United States, praying for organization, and designating a place for the seat of justice, had been presented to the Governor. This document is signed by Thomas Moonlight, Secretary of State, and James M. Harvey, Governor.

The first meeting of the County Commissioners took place on March 23, 1870, at the house of W. W. Andrews. The first work undertaken was the laying out of the county in three townships. The first of these, known as number one, comprised all north of an east and west line touching the mouth of Dutch Creek. Number two embraced all south of this line, "to include the E. P. Hickok claim on Walnut and to within ten miles of the mouth of the Grouse." Number three took in "all south of E. P. Hickok's claim on Walnut and the lower ten miles of the Grouse and Arkansas to the State line."

The same meeting provided for an election, to be held at the house of Edward Philips at the mouth of Rock Creek in number one, at Winfield in number two, and at Creswell in number three. All the various county and township officers were to be elected and the county seat located. After electing W. W. Andrews chairman of the board and ordering notices of the election of May 2, the board adjourned, having accomplished a remarkable amount of business for a new board in a brand new county.

Pursuant to the notices issued, the spring election was held on May 2, 1870. On the 6th, the Commissioners again convened, and after canvassing the vote declared the following persons elected: County Commissioner in number one, Morgan Willett; number two, Thomas Blanchard; number three, G. H. Norton. H. C. Loomis was elected County Clerk; E. P. Hickok, Clerk of the District Court; F. A. Hunt, Sheriff; John Devore, County Treasurer; W. E. Cook, Register of Deeds; T. B. Ross, Probate Judge; F. S. Graham, Surveyor, and W. S. Graham, Coroner.

In November, 1870, occurred the first general election. It resulted, as such affairs generally do in new counties, in a vote showing a great Republican balance of power. For member of Congress, D. P. Low had 250 votes, R. C. Foster 94, and S. Clark 6. For Governor, James M. Harvey received 255, and Isaac Sharp 92; for Associate Justice, D. J. Brewer had 254 and R. M. Ruggles 98; for Secretary of State, W. H. Smallwood had 254 and Charles C. Duncan 94; for State Auditor, A. Thoman 254, H. M. Mahon 94; State Treasurer, J. E. Hayes 254, S. C. Gephart 94; Attorney General, A. S. Williams 274, A. W. Rucker 94; State Superintendent of Public Instruction, H. D. McCarty 254, Thomas S. Murray 94. The vote on county officers stood: Senator, Fifteenth District, E. S. Stover 322, H. S. Hunt 15; Representative, E. C. Manning 258, H. B. Norton 150; Probate Judge, T. B. Ross 212, H. B. Norton 150; Sheriff, J. M. Pattison 186, S. H. Ebley 148; Clerk of the District Court, E. P. Hickok 351; County Clerk, A. A. Jackson 200, R. J. Pond 146; Treasurer, G. B. Green 198, T. McIntire 140; County Attorney, E. S. Torrance 178, T. H. Johnson 135; Register of Deeds, Walter A. Smith 180, W. E. Cook 124, A. J. Patrick 94; County Surveyor, H. L. Barker 190, Samuel Thompson 144; Coroner, H. B. Kellogg 206, T. J. Raybell 7; Superintendent of Public Instruction, L. B. Wamsey 206, John Dudley 130. Upon examination of the returns, several serious irregularities were found, and four precincts having sent nothing with the ballots to show where they were polled were thrown out. The returns from Dexter Township were also rejected, no such township having been created.

The election of November 7, 1871, raised no special issues. J. M. Alexander was elected Senator from the Twenty-fifth District and T. McIntire Representative. The county officers elected were: A. A. Johnson, County Clerk; James Parker, Sheriff; J. T. Paul, Register of Deeds; E. B. Hazen, Treasurer; M. Hemingway, Surveyor; G. P. Wagenor, Superintendent of Public Instruction.

The general election of 1872 gave Horace Greeley 277 votes, U. S. Grant 631, and Lyman Trumbull 1. The county officers from 1872 to the present time, with State Senators and Representatives, are as follows: Senators, Twenty-fifth District, M. M. Murdock, 1872; H. S. St. Clair, 1874; A. J. Pyburn, 1876; W. P. Hackney, 1880. Representatives: James McDermott, 1872; William Martin, 1873; Thomas R. Bryan, 1874; W. P. Hackney, 1875. The Eighty-eighth and Eighty-ninth Districts were formed this year, and Representatives elected as follows: L. J. Webb and C. R. Mitchell, 1876; E. C. Manning and M. R. Leonard, 1878; A. B. Lemon and C. R. Mitchell, 1880. Cowley next became the Sixty-eighth, Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh, and elected in 1882 J. W. Winner, J. J. Johnson and C. R. Mitchell. County Clerks have been: A. A. Johnson, 1873; M. G. Troup, 1875–77; J. S. Hunt, 1879–81. Sheriffs: R. L. Walker, 1873–75; L. Lipman, 1877; A. T. Shenneman, 1879–81. Registers of Deeds: N. C. McCulloch, 1873; E. P. COUNTY SEAT, BUILDINGS AND RAILROADS.

At the first election in the county, held May 2, 1870, Winfield was selected as the county seat. This was taken in high dudgeon by the Arkansas City settlers, whose chief aim had all the time been to found the future county seat. It was, however, evident from the location of their town by the new survey, that it could never attain the prize, and some expedient must be resorted to if they would not see their hopes forever dashed. A new town company was accordingly formed, and on June 13, 1871, the Tisdale Town Company laid claim to the land immediately about the geographical center of the county and began to build. This move was met by the Winfield settlers, who appeared on the ground with claimants and lumber, but were finally beaten by their rivals and compelled to retire. A petition for a new election to locate the seat of justice was at once put in circulation, and the election set for August 22, 1871. A lively contest at once sprang up and the contestants on each side left no stone unturned to win the day. A canvass of the votes gave Winfield 721, and Tisdale 523. Charges of fraud and illegal voting were fully indulged in, and, as an old settler states, with reason, but the contest was never renewed, and Winfield remained the possessor of the coveted prize.

The year 1873 saw the erection of the present county buildings. The court house, 40x50 feet, was begun in the summer of this year, and completed at a cost of $11,500. It stands upon a full block, half of which was donated by the Town Association in 1873, and the remainder purchased for $1,000 in 1879. Several minor additions have been made to the building, bringing its total cost to $15,000.

The county jail, which stands a short distance north of the court house, was built by the city of Winfield at a cost of $27,000 and donated to the county; like the court house it is of brick, and though unpretentious is a very substantial structure.

The first railway project affecting this county was broached in March, 1873, by the Kansas Nebraska Railway Company. The proposal of the company was for a subscription of $150,000 to its stock and the issue of an equal amount of county bonds. The matter was voted on at a special election April 15, 1873, and 1,138 votes were cast for and 798 votes against the proposition. The road was not, however, constructed. Early in 1877, the Memphis, Parsons & Ellsworth Narrow Gauge road proposed to run through this county, but failed to receive sufficient encouragement. On April 16 of the same year the K. C. E. S. Railway was voted $26,000 in Creswell, $21,500 in Bolton, $20,500 in Rock, and $19,000 in Beaver Township. These bonds were to run thirty years at ten per cent, and were redeemable at any time after five years at 85 cents on the dollar. They were to be issued on the completion of the road, and as it was never built were never made out.

On December 24, 1878, the county decided by a vote of 1,853 to 935 to issue bonds to the Cowley, Sumner & Fort Smith Railway to an amount not exceeding $144,000. This is a branch of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé road. The road was completed to Winfield on October 1, 1879, and on October 13 the county issued $72,000 in six per cent bonds to the road. In December of the same year, the railway reached Arkansas City, and December 30, $56,000 more bonds were issued. On April 29, 1879, the county voted $68,000 bonds to the Southern Kansas & Western road, a branch of the Leavenworth, Lawrence & Gulf. These bonds had thirty years to run, and drew seven per cent. They were carried by a vote of 1,612 to 438. The road reached Winfield on February 17, 1880, and $51,000 bonds were at once issued. On March 16, it reached the west line of the county, and $17,000 more were issued. In March, 1881, the county sold $68,000 of the stock of this road, taken in exchange for bonds, at 66 cents on the dollar, and with the proceeds purchased $38,500 of the county bonds.

Prior to 1877, there was no report of the farm animals owned in the county. An idea not only of the growth of the county but of the shape of that advance may be formed from a glance at the following statistics: Horses in 1877, 4,501; in 1878, 5,160; 1880, 7,479; 1882, 7,873. Mules and asses, 1877, 881; 1878, 1,027; 1880, 1,619; 1882, 1,478. Milch cows, 1877, 3,891; 1878, 4,061; 1880, 5,695; 1882, 6,862. The wool clip of 1877, was 23,070 pounds; of 1880, 30,658; of 1882, 142,706 pounds. In 1877, there were 5,754 apple trees in bearing, in 1880, 22,872; in 1882, 37,044. Apple trees not in bearing; in 1877, 68,566; 1880, 92,466; 1882, 85,784. Pear trees in bearing, 1877, 1,425; 1880, 704; 1882, 1,630; not in bearing, 1877, 2,795; 1880, 4,222; 1882, 4,504. Cherries in bearing, 1877, 3,846; 1880, 6,708; 1882, 13,367; not bearing, 1877, 14,629; 1880, 16,906; 1882, 22,454. Total value of garden produce in 1877, $3,293.25; in 1880, $12,469; in 1882, $13,764. The total acreage of land under cultivation was in 1880, 305,855 against 151,394.37 in 1877. The total valuation of all manufactories in the county was in 1882, $151,800. The population of the county was in 1870, 1,175; in 1875, 8,963; in 1880, 20,649. None but the Assessor's census was taken in 1882, but the population may be very nearly estimated at 22,000.

The following carefully prepared statistics show the acres devoted to the principal crops during the past ten years. Their perusal will afford eloquent evidence of the county's prosperity:

WINFIELD.

The first claim on the Winfield town site was taken on June 11, 1869, by E. C. Manning. Shortly afterward, W. W. Andrews, C. M. Wood and A. A. Jackson took claims adjoining. The corner-stone of all these claims being at a point near the present L. L. & G. depot, and yet marked by a post. Andrews had the northeast claim; Wood the northwest; Manning the southwest, and Jackson the southeast.

On January 13, 1870, the Winfield Town Company was organized with E. C. Manning, President; W. W. Andrews, Vice President; C. M. Wood, Treasurer; W. G. Graham, Secretary; E. C. Manning, J. H. Land, A. A. Jackson, W. G. Graham and J. C. Monforte, Directors. The forty acres of the land belonging to Manning was laid out as the center of the new town, and Main street, 120 feet wide, laid out north and south of this land. A log house was put up on the main street by the settlers, and given Manning in exchange for his land taken by them. Settlement on the town site was slow, and when on August 15, A. D. Millington, now proprietor of the Courier, and J. C. Fuller, of the Winfield Bank, arrived and purchased Jackson's claim, the only buildings were the log store of E. C. Manning, which stood where the opera house now does; the log blacksmith shop of Max Shoeb, where Read's bank is now located; the drug store of W. Q. Mansfield and the hardware store of Frank Hunt. Millington and Fuller at once took active steps for the advancement of the town. For the various steps which led to their final success, we are indebted to the following account kindly furnished by Mr. Millington, who, as a leading character in the events of that day, deserves special credence:

In January, 1871, the survey of this county was made by the United States Deputy Surveyors, O. F. Short and Angell. This survey furnished a new excitement for the settlers, for the lines of the survey, necessarily, in the nature of things, could not conform with the claim lines. There was a crowd of settlers following each surveying party, with teams and lumber, and whenever a good bottom claim was shown by the survey to have no shanty or other improvements on it, the first one who got to it with lumber or logs took the claim. Some persons found their improvements surveyed on to the claims of older settlers, and thereby lost their claims. All this resulted in many contests at the land office, but it was remarkable that very little violence was resorted to.

The survey showed E. C. Manning's claim to be the northwest quarter, and J. C. Fuller's claim the northeast quarter of Section 28, in Township 32, south of Range 4 east. The town company's forty acres was the northeast quarter of Manning's claim. Immediately after the Government survey, in January, 1871, E. C. Manning, J. C. Fuller and D. A. Millington formed themselves into another company, called the Winfield Town Association, and joined the southeast quarter of Manning's claim with the west half of Fuller's claim, as the property of the association. This added to the town company's forty acres made a town site of 160 acres, in square form, and D. A. Millington, who was then the only surveyor and engineer settled in the county, surveyed this town site off into blocks and lots, streets and alleys. Though the three above named persons had then control of most of the stock of the town company, yet there were several other stockholders in the company, so that the addition to the town site being wholly controlled by the three men, made it a different ownership, and created the need of the new corporation, the Town Association.

The plan that had been adopted to secure the erection of buildings in Winfield, was to contract to give a deed of the lot built upon free, and the adjoining lot at value, when the said Manning and Fuller should be able to enter their claims at the United States land office. It was intended and expected, that when the land office should be opened, Manning and Fuller should each enter his entire claim, and then deed the forty acres of town site to the town company, and the 120 acres to the town association, and these corporations should then deed the improved lots to the owners of the improvements, and sell them the adjoining lots at value. Such entries and dispositions had been made in the cases of the town sites of Augusta and Wichita, and it was considered the true way in such cases.

During the spring, new buildings continued to be built on the town site, stores and shops were filled, and dwellings occupied. It took a long time, or until July 10, for the notes, plats and records of the survey to be made out and recorded in the offices at Washington and Lawrence, and get ready to open the land office at Augusta. During this time, the occupants of the town site began to get restless, and demand that the companies should give them more lots free. Some urged that the companies had no more right to the town site than any one else, and that all the unimproved lots legally belonged to the owners of the improved lots, to be divided pro rata. These disaffected parties became so numerous as to embrace a great proportion of the seventy-two owners of buildings on the town site. They procured the services of a great land lawyer of Columbus, named Sanford, made an assessment, and collected money to carry out their measures, held meetings, in which excited speeches were made against the two corporations, and were prepared, at a moment's notice, when the land office was open, to rush in and enter the town site, through the Probate Judge, who should distribute the lots to the inhabitants, according to their theory. Thus commenced the famous Winfield town site controversy.

On Sunday evening, July 9, the town association got private information that the plats would arrive at Augusta that evening. They, with T. H. Ross, Probate Judge, were in Augusta at sunrise on the next morning, the 10th, and the Winfield town site was the first land entry in this county. Having made their other entries, they returned. During the next night, the citizens, having heard of the arrival of the plats, went up, in considerable force, to enter the town site, but they did not do it.

After the entry, Judge Ross appointed W. W. Andrews, H. C. Loomis and L. M. Kennedy Commissioners, under the law, to set off to the occupants of the Winfield town site, the lots to wich they were entitled, according to their respective interests. The time of meeting was advertised, and all parties met September 20. The town companies presented to the Commissioners a list of the lots, showing what lots were improved, and who were entitled to them, and showing that the vacant lots were the property of the two companies respectively. The citizens spoke only through their lawyer, and demanded that the vacant lots should be divided up among the occupants, in proportion to the value of their buildings. After a full hearing, the Commissioners decided according to the schedule of the companies, and Judge Ross immediately executed deeds accordingly. This decision was accepted by a large part of the citizens, who, to prevent further trouble, executed quit-claim deeds of all the vacant lots to the two companies. But Sanford was irrepressible, and a suit was commenced in the District Court, by Enoch Maris, A. A. Jackson et al. to set aside the deeds from the Probate Judge to the companies as void. The case was thrown out of court on demurrer by Judge Webb, commenced again, tried on demurrer before Judge Campbell, who over-ruled the demurrer, and promptly rendered judgment for the plaintiffs. The case was carried to the Supreme Court on error and reversed in the spring of 1873. Another case was commenced by ten of those who had quit-claimed, ran the course of the courts, and failed in the end.

It seems to have been an understood matter that the point where Winfield stands would some day be occupied by a town. In June, 1869, when C. M. Wood had his stockade on the west bank of the river opposite the town site, he thought of the location of a town, and later, promised Mrs. Wood that it should be named by her. After some deliberation the name of Legonda was selected and the settlement was thus known for some time. W. W. Andrews, who took a claim in 1869, and went back to Leavenworth for his family, used as a strong argument in inducing Mrs. Andrews to come to the frontier the privilege of naming the town in honor of Winfield Scott, a Baptist minister of Leavenworth. Mrs. Andrews' code at that time was that the town should be so named, $500 raised for the support of a church, and Rev. Mr. Scott should come and be its pastor. On her arrival at the settlement and learning that it already bore the name of Legonda, Mrs. Andrews expressed bitter disappointment and a desire to return, and was with difficulty made to see that no name could be finally adopted until voted upon by the settlers. An election was called and a formal ballot taken, and a dance followed. Formal ballot boxes were not in vogue, and a chest, to which was affixed the lock of Mrs. Andrews' washstand drawer, was used. There is no evidence that there were two keys to that lock, but Mrs. Andrews remarks with a twinkle in her eye, that while they were dancing Legonda lost the day. A count of the ballots resulted in favor of Winfield, which has ever since been the accepted appellation.

A post office was established at Winfield in May, 1870, with E. C. Manning as Postmaster. The office was in an old log store which stood where the opera house is now located. This building was removed in 1878 to the rear of the Telegram building, and served a year later as the starting point of the fire which swept the corner of the block. The post office moved from the log store to T. K. Johnson's, then back to the first position, whence it was moved again, occupying several places on Ninth avenue and finally reaching its present quarters. Manning held his position but a short time, being followed the same year by A. W. Tousey. T. K. Johnson took the office in 1871, James Kelley in 1875, and D. A. Millington in 1879.

CITY GOVERNMENT, SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.

On February 22, 1873, Winfield was incorporated as a city of the third class. On March 7, the first city election took place, and resulted as follows: W. H. H. Maris, Mayor; J. W. Curns, Clerk; A. A. Jackson, Police Judge; M. L. Robinson, Treasurer; C. W. Richmond, Marshal; J. M. Alexander, Attorney. The Council consisted of O. F. Boyle, C. A. Bliss, J. D. Cochran, H. S. Silver and S. C. Smith. Mayors since that time have been: S. C. Smith, 1874; D. A. Millington, 1875–76; R. L. Walker, 1877; J. R. Lynn, 1878; John B. Lynn, 1879; M. G. Troup, 1881. City Clerks of this period have been: B. F. Baldwin, 1874–75–76–77. Police Judges: N. H. Wood, 1874; M. G. Troup, 1875; J. W. Curns, 1876–77; W. M. Boyer, 1878–79.

On February 27, 1879, the city having been found to have a population of over 2,000, it was declared by the Governor a city of the third class. It was then divided into two wards, the First taking in all east of Main street, and the Second all west of that line.

Of the early educational history of the city, but little can be said. Winfield had no long stretch of years scantily supplied with educational facilities. Hardly was it a town before a fine stone school house was erected, and thorough instruction accorded to all. The first settlement in the county was in 1870, and 1871–72 saw the erection in Winfield of a stone school building, costing $10,000. Here E. P. Hickok taught until 1875, when he was succeeded by A. H. Lemon. W. C. Robinson taught in 1876 and 1877; G. W. Robinson in 1878–79, and E. T. Trimble has been Principal from 1880 to the present time. In 1878, the long wooden building in the northwest corner of the First Ward school block, was built to accommodate the primary department and ease the overflowing main building. Prior to this for two years, the basement of the Presbyterian Church and such buildings as could be rented, had been in use. After the division of the city into wards, the old school building was entirely remodeled, and now forms the north wing of the First Ward school. This building cost $6,000 and is one of the most commodious to be found in the State. It is of the limestone found near the city, and has four rooms. The teachers in this ward are: E. T. Trimble, Principal; Mrs. E. T. Trimble, Miss S. J. Clute, Miss Mattie Gibson, Miss Alice E. Dickie, Miss T. E. Goldsmith, Miss Rose Rounds. In the long wooden building is the primary department taught by Mrs. W. B. Caton and Miss Mary Bryant.

The school building in the Second Ward was also built in 1880, at a cost of $6,000. It is the exact counterpart of the First Ward School, and has four rooms. It is taught by Miss M. E. Hamill, Miss E. McCrippen, Miss Ella S. Kelly and Miss A. Klingman. Its enrollment is 250, that of both schools 892.

The Methodist Church was organized in the spring of 1870, by B. C. Swarts, who became its pastor, remaining until some time in 1871. He was followed by J. O. Smith, 1871–72; Williams, 1872–73; J. W. Lowry, 1873–74; J. McQuiston, 1874–75; C. J. Adams, September, 1875; E. W. Kanaval, March, 1876; J. L. Rushbridge, June, 1876; J. A. Hyden, March, 1879; H. A. Tucker, March, 1881; Paul F. Jones, March, 1882. When organized, the society had a membership of eleven. Meetings were for a long time held in a little frame church on Ninth avenue, now used as a residence. The present church edifice was erected in 1875, at a cost of $12,000. It is of stone, and when first erected had a spire 100 feet high of the same material. This, however, soon yielded to the force of a Kansas zephyr. The present church membership is fully 300. A neat parsonage stands on the church lot. A Sabbath school, organized at about the same time as the church, has an average attendance of 200, and is in charge of Mr. S. H. Jennings.

The Baptist Church was organized on November 27, 1870, by Rev. Winfield Scott, in honor of whom the city is named. Rev. E. P. Hickok supplied the society for about a year, and was followed by Rev. N. L. Rigby, who remained until 1875. The church was then supplied by Rev. A. F. Randall, and October 1, 1878, Rev. J. Cairns, the present pastor, took charge. The church membership has risen from eleven in 1871 to 180 in 1882. One of the first acts of the society was to erect the old stone church, which was used from its completion, in 1872, to 1878. Soon after Mr. Cairns' arrival, services were held in the opera house, where they continued until the completion of the new church, in 1882. This building is said to be the finest in Southern Kansas. It is of the fine limestone found about two miles from the city, cost $14,000, and seats 700. It is fitted throughout with St. Louis opera chairs, enabling attendants to combine bodily ease with mental exercise. A Sabbath school was organized in April, 1878, with J. McDermott Superintendent, and an average attendance of seventy. It now has over 200, and is in charge of E. T. Trimble.

The Christian Church was organized on the fourth Sunday of September, 1872, with a membership of thirty-one. P. F. Whittaker and Henry Hawkins were elected Elders. On the fourth Sunday of October, Rev. Erastus Lathrop began revival meetings, which lasted ten days, and added fifteen members to the society. The first pastor was Rev. Mr. Womack, who came in 1872. He was followed by J. H. Irvin, H. D. Gans, John Blevins, H. D. Gans, T. L. Cartwright, H. D. Gans, F. M. Rains, and the present pastor, H. D. Gans, who is now serving for the fourth time. The early services were held in the Baptist Church, but in 1873 the society built a small church of their own, at a cost of $1,000. A new church, 36x54, and costing $2,500, was begun in December, 1882, and will be completed in 1883. The church enrollment is now 125. A flourishing Sunday school, organized in 1872, is attached to the church, has a membership of seventy-five, and is in charge of T. R. Bryan.

The Presbyterian Church was organized on January 19, 1873, by Rev. A. B. Naylor, of the Home Missionary Society. It had no regular pastor, but was assigned to Mr. Naylor, who had come to the State in the hope of regaining his health. May 23, the work was found too arduous, and Mr. Naylor retiring, the church was without a pastor until July, when Rev. J. E. Platter, the present incumbent, arrived. At that time, the society consisted of the seven charter members, but twenty-two others who had been members of the church in other places, but had never formally lost membership, were placed upon the rolls. John P. McMullen and William Greenlee were elected Ruling Elders, and the church put in working order. The work of organization had been conducted and the first separate services were held in the Hudson building, used as a carriage paint shop. This was fitted up with chairs and rejected school benches. From this place, the society moved to the court house, where services were held until the church building was ready for occupancy. This was on September 23, 1877. The church had been some time in building, the basement being first finished, and used not only for devotional purposes, but by a part of the city school. As completed, the structure is well worthy of any city. It is of brick, with a stone basement, has a seating capacity of 400, and cost $8,000. A Sabbath school was established in September, 1877, under the superintendence of the pastor, and with an attendance of 100. It is now in charge of Mr. T. B. Myers, and has an average attendance of fully 200.

The African Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1879, by Rev. A. H. Daily, who, although located at Wichita, became its pastor. He was followed by W. F. Hegeman, 1880; Rufus Parks, 1881; Mr. Wooten, 1882. A church edifice was erected in 1880, at a cost of about $600. The church membership is now twenty-five. A Sabbath school was held at private houses some time before the organization of the church. It is now in charge of L. C. Scott, and has an average attendance of thirty.

Grace Episcopal Church was organized in April, 1880, with a membership of twenty. Rev. S. M. Fry was selected as rector, but remained only a few months, giving place to Rev. Charles H. Canfield, who resigned in 1882, leaving the church without a pastor. The services of the church have always been held in the District Court room. A Sabbath school was organized in October, 1880, under the superintendence of L. H. Owen. It is now in charge of W. H. Smith, and has an average attendance of fifty.

THE PRESS AND SOCIETIES.

The Cowley County Censor was the first paper issued in the county. Its first issue saw the light on August 13, 1870. A. J. Patrick, the sponsor of this new enterprise, had at the start no means of printing his paper, and the first two issues came from the Augusta office. The third, however, was printed in Winfield, from its own material, and on the historic Meeker press, the first printing press ever operated in Kansas. The Censor was a six-column folio, of strong Republican views. June 3, 1871, Patrick sold out to Leland J. Webb, who, on August 15, formed a partnership with W. E. Doud, now of the Eureka Republican. Three weeks later, Doud sold out to E. G. Nichols, and January 6, 1872, the paper was sold to W. H. Kerns, who discontinued it.

The Winfield Messenger was started on January 13, 1872, as the direct successor of the Censor, and was printed from the same material. On July 4, 1872, Yale Brothers purchased the office of W. H. Kerns, and ran the paper until December 5, when it died a natural death.

The Cowley County Telegram was first issued at Tisdale on September 12, 1872, under the management of W. M. Allison. Five numbers were issued at Tisdale, and the office removed to Winfield. January 1, 1873, Arthur H. Hane bought an interest in the paper, but, becoming dissatisfied with the business, sold out March 20, to A. B. Stineberger. He in turn wearied of the uphill work of frontier newspaper life, and retired on July 3. Allison then ran the paper alone until 1878, when Bert Crapster bought an interest, and a daily edition was established. Two years later, Crapster sold out, and Charles C. Black, after a few weeks' partnership with Allison, purchased the entire business. Extensive improvements were at once made, a fine stone building erected, and one of the best offices in the State procured. Winfield was, however, as yet too small for the support of a good daily paper, and November 1, 1881, the Telegram vanished from the scene, the material was sold to A. B. Stineberger, who used it on the daily and weekly Courant. On July 10, 1882, the Telegram was revived on the ruins of the defunct Courant, by Sam E. Davis and George Rembaugh. It is now a nicely printed Democratic weekly, of forty-eight columns.

The Winfield Courier appeared on January 1, 1873, bearing the names of R. S. Waddell & Co., as publishers. Waddell was manager, and J. C. Lillie local editor. On March 27, of the same year, the office changed hands, James Kelly, now of the Sumner County Wellingtonian, becoming editor, and Vinnie B. Beckett, local. This arrangment lasted until July 1, 1875, when Wirt W. Walton took the local page. On November 11, of the same year, Kelly sold out to E. C. Manning. On August 16, 1877, the office was sold to D. A. Millington and A. B. Lemon, who took the editorial and local page respectively. January, 1879, saw the last change, which placed the paper in the hands of the Courier company, and while retaining Mr. Millington, gave the local page to Edward P. Greer, who still holds it. The Courier office is now one of the most complete in the southern part of the State, having a large variety of type, and besides the usual supply of job presses, a large power press for newspaper and poster work. The paper is a nine-column folio, of excellent make up, and is a worthy exponent of the county and city.

The Plow and Anvil.—This paper was started on November 19, 1874, by Col. John M. Alexander. On April 22, 1875, it was sold to Amos Walton and C. M. McIntire, who in March, 1876, changed its name to the Cowley County Democrat. On August 16, of the same year, the material was sold to W. M. Allison, who took it out of the county.

The Cowley County Courant was, as has been said, printed on the Telegram material. Both daily and weekly editions were printed, and the hopes of its publisher, A. B. Stineberger, ran high, but after preaching Republicanism from November 1, 1881, to July, 1882, it yielded to the inevitable, and "passed over to the great majority" of frontier dailies.

Knights of Pythias.—The lodge of this order in this city was first named Walnut Valley, No. 70, but was shortly after re-christened as "Chevalier," retaining its number. Its charter was granted November 14, 1882, and the officers then elected are still in place. They are: Quincy A. Glass, C. C.; C. C. Green, V. C.; P. Jones, Prelate; George H. Buckman, K. R. The Building and Loan Association was organized on January 1, 1882, with H. G. Fuller, President; A. H. Hendricks, Vice President; J. E. Platter, Treasurer; J. F. McMullen, Secretary. During its first year of business, just closing, it has prospered finely, and now has $1,500 loaned on first mortgages.

The Winfield Bank.—The first banking house established in the county was the Winfield Bank of J. C. Fuller. This institution opened its doors in the fall of 1870. In January, 1878, J. C. McMullen, who had been engaged in similar business in Arkansas City since 1871, came to Winfield and started the Citizens' Bank. On April 1, 1879, the two banks consolidated and formed the Winfield Bank, chartered under the State law. This institution has now a cash capital of $50,000, and a surplus of $25,000. Besides this accumulation, it has paid every year since its organization a semi-annual dividend of ten per cent—a record probably without parallel in the records of banking. This great success is due to two causes—careful management and immense tributary territory. The building occupied and owned by the bank was erected in the summer of 1879, at a cost of $8,000. It has two stories and a basement, the latter occupied by the Courier office, and the second floor by various offices.

Read's Bank was started in 1872, by M. L. Read, who still owns it. As a private bank, it has no statement of resources, but is known to have invested a capital of $75,000, and a surplus of $25,000. The bank building, on Main street, near Ninth avenue, was erected in 1871–72, at a cost of $7,500. It is worth mention, that this was the first brick building in the county, and that the brick used in it were the first manufactured, the brick-makers being imported for that purpose. Various improvements in vaults and fixtures have increased the valuation of the building to fully $8,000.

Winfield City Mill was built in 1872 by C. A. Bliss & Co. The building was 40x30 feet, and had two and one-half stories. It was started with three run of buhr-stones, but later two buhrs and three rolls were added. In 1880, B. F. Wood became a partner in the concern, and in January, 1881, an engine of 100 horse-power was put in to aid the four turbine water-wheels before in use. In August, 1882, the property was valued at $30,000. On August 13, of that year, the mill was burned to the ground, only the water-wheels and part of the engine escaping.

The Roller Mill.—With undaunted courage the sufferers by this fire went at the task of rebuilding, with the aim of making not only a finer mill than the old City Mills, but the finest in the State. In this they succeeded, the mill being completed in January, 1883. It is sawed magnesian limestone, five stories in height, and covers a ground space of 40x60 feet. The motive power is the same as that of the old mill. After completing his house, he returned to Cottonwood Falls, for the purpose of getting goods, but soon after his departure the Indians burned his house, which proved a severe loss to him, as he had expended $500 of his scanty means to build it. On his return to Cottonwood Falls, Mr. Wood was married, June 26, to Miss Malinda Jones, who was at that time engaged in teaching school near that place. ARKANSAS CITY.

Arkansas City, the second city of the county, is located on the rolling peninsula between the Arkansas and Walnut Rivers, four miles from the south line of the county and twelve miles south of Winfield, the county seat. It was laid out in 1870, by T. R. Wilson, H. B. and G. H. Norton and others. From its earliest settlement, it has had a very large Indian Territory trade, and grown rapidly, having in 1882 a population of 1,856. The name finally adopted is the fourth which has been given the place, Adelphi, Walnut City and Creswell having for a time been in use. The branch of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway reached this point on December 31, 1879, since which time the principal growth of the city has taken place.

The first building on the town site was the log house built by G. H. Norton and now occupied by Mrs. Gray. The second was the little frame next C. R. Sipes' hardware store; the third a frame house occupied as a grocery by L. Goodrich. The first general store was opened in 1870 by G. H. & H. Norton, who bought a stock of goods and began business in their cabin. Sipes about this time began business as did Houghton and McLaughlin. The first drug store was opened by Eddy & Keith; the first hotel by R. Woolsey, who also started a livery stable. H. D. Kellogg was the first physician, W. P. Hackney, the first attorney, and P. Buck the first blacksmith. In the spring of 1870, W. M. Sleeth set up a saw mill near where the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé depot now stands.

A post office was established at this point in April, 1870, and G. H. Norton appointed Postmaster. At that time the office was kept in the old log house which was the first building of the town, and is now occupied by Mrs. Gray. Mr. Norton was succeeded by M. J. Martin, A. D. Keith, C. M. Scott, W. B. Hughes and J. C. Topliff, the present incumbent, who took charge of the office on December 21, 1880. It was made a money order office in 1872, the first order being issued July 17 to A. D. Keith in favor of Church & Co., of Topeka. The office has been of a decidedly migratory character, and has occupied successively the old log house, the building now used by Bonsall as a photograph studio, the Goff & Milton Block, the Davis building, the Goff & Milton Block a second time, the store of Schiffbauer Brothers, the Harwood building, Chappel & Farrar's and the present room, which is the first which has been the property of the Postmaster.

The order for the incorporation of the city was issued on June 10, 1872, by W. P. Campbell, Judge of the Thirteenth District. An election of officers was held July 2, and resulted in the choice of A. D. Keith, Mayor; Amos Walton, Police Judge; W. F. Benedict, H. Endicott, T. H. McLaughlin, J. I. Mitchell and George McIntire, Councilmen. Since that election, the following Mayors have been in office: A. D. Keith, 1873; H. O. Meigs, 1874; S. P. Channell, 1875–76; H. D. Kellogg, 1877; James Benedict, 1878; J. I. Mitchell, 1879; A. J. Chappel, 1880; H. D. Kellogg, 1881; A. A. Newman, 1882. R. J. Pond was City Clerk in 1873, H. P. Standley and I. H. Bonsall in 1874, and the latter to the present time. T. McIntire was Police Judge in 1873–74–75, J. Christian, 1876–77–78–79–80; I. H. Bonsall, 1881–82. The councilmen of 1882 are H. D. Kellogg, O. S. Rarick, James Benedict, V. M. Ayres and J. M. Ware.

The city water works were put in in the spring of 1881. Water is obtained from a spring near town and pumped to a reservoir in the south part of the city, whence it is distributed in the usual manner. A wind mill was at first employed, but failed to give an adequate supply, and steam pumping apparatus was procured. With the growth of the city these works will soon require enlargement, but for the present they are all that is needed.

SCHOOLS, CHURCHES AND SOCIETIES.

The first school in the place was taught by T. A. Wilson in 1871; District No. 2 put up its first schoolhouse at a cost of $400, where Fitch & Byron are now located. The present fine school building was erected in 1873 at a cost of $10,000. Mr. Wilson was succeeded by Miss Lizzie Swarts, E. W. Hulse, E. R. Thompson, J. H. Sylvester, O. Phelps and A. T. Atkinson, the present Principal. Six departments are now taught, and the school enrollment is over 400. The educational force consists of A. T. Atkinson, Principal; Miss J. Peterson, Miss Margaret J. Burrows, Miss Susie Hunt, Miss Libbie Christian and Miss Anna Norton.

The first religious services were conducted March 2, at the funeral of J. Polk Rogers, who died from exposure on the Arkansas River. The first membership of the church was ten. In 1873, a parsonage was erected at a cost of $500, and January 6, 1874, the society met in J. C. McMullen's building, and resolved to build a church. Two days later, work was begun on the edifice; nearly completed during 1874. The cost of this building was $3,000. Rev. John Clark was pastor in 1874, Rev. L. F. Laverty, in 1879–82, and Rev. I. N. Morehead in 1882. The church now has a membership of 148. A Sabbath school organized at about the same time has an average attendance of sixty, and is in charge of Mr. James Hill.

The United Presbyterian Church was organized in 1872, and for some time supplied by Rev. R. J. Thompson. The first regular pastor of the society was Rev. R. S. McClanahan; who remained until 1881, since which time there has been no pastor. The church membership is now seventy-five. The brick church on Fifth avenue was built in 1874 at a cost of $3,000. A Sabbath school was started in 1874, and now has an average attendance of seventy-five. It is in charge of Dr. R. H. Reed.

The Presbyterian Church of Arkansas City was organized in March 27, 1875, by Rev. S. B. Fleming, who still remains its pastor. Its first membership of twenty-nine has been steadily added to, and the enrollment now foots up 155. The church building erected in 1874 for an Independent Congregational society, which shortly became defunct, was purchased by the Presbyterians for $2,500, and enlarged and improved, making the total cost $4,000.

A Sabbath school was organized in 1875, and now has an average attendance of ninety. It is in charge of M. D. Mowry.

The Baptist Church.—In the fall of 1880, Mrs. Coombs and Mrs. Bird called together the Baptists living in and near Arkansas City, but did not collect material enough to effect a church organization. Another attempt was made in 1882, and the society organized, but its membership is too small to support a pastor, and it has only occasional services performed by Rev. J. Cairns, of Winfield.

Gray took the paper, and a few months later the latter retired, and the business was continued by the senior editor, who still publishes the Traveler. The paper was at first a seven-column folio, but was enlarged May 25, 1881, to the nine-column form in which it now appears. It has always been Republican in politics, is issued Wednesdays, and has a circulation of 700.

It is furnished with four four-foot buhr-stones, and has a capacity of 100 barrels of flour per day. Power is furnished by an engine of 80-horse-power and by four Chase water wheels of the same rating. Steam is used when water fails. The cost of the mill was $20,000.

The Canal Mills were built in April, 1882, at a cost of $18,000. The buildings are two in number, one 20x36 and two stories in height, and one 30x36 and three stories high. This is utilized in a 60-inch turbine wheel, the result being stated at 100-horse-power.

The Spears Mill was built in 1882, by William Spears & Co., at a cost of $8,000. The mill building is of stone, 36x40 feet, and has two stories and a basement. A dam 900 feet in length was built across the Arkansas, and the canal, which runs near Arkansas City, completed to the Walnut. The fall from the entrance to the mouth is twenty-two feet, and the horse-power obtained 700. Already two mills have been erected on the canal, and other industries will undoubtedly soon be supplied from it.

BURDEN.

Burden is the child of the railway, in a sense. Had there been no K. C., L. & S. road, the town site would still be a farm. In this it resembles a large portion of the newer towns of the State, the town coming to the railway instead of the railway to the town. The principle is the same as that of Mahomet and the mountain. It is located 225 miles southwest of Kansas City and sixteen east of Winfield. It was laid out in the fall of 1879 by a town company consisting of Robert F. Burden, Ford & Leonard, O. B. Gunn and T. K. Johnson. Of this company, Burden was President, and the town was named in his honor. The town site proper covers eighty acres, but the property of the town company is considerably more extensive. Twenty acres were purchased of Isaac Gatton, and 160 of Findlay Graham. The railway was completed to this point February 1, 1880.

Immediately after the laying out of the town, settlers flocked into it, and every available shanty within a considerable radius was hauled to town to do temporary duty. An old claim shanty which stood on the town site when it was laid out was moved from the main street, and now wears out a dishonored old age as a cow shed. The first building erected was the stone store of Ford & Leonard; the second, the drug store of Hooker & Phelps (now R. R. Phelps); the third, the post office building. The first birth in the town was that of a daughter of J. M. Hooker; the first death, William Schooling, who was building a store, but died before its completion; the first wedding, J. H. Wood and Miss Smith. The first physician was J. M. Wright; the first attorney, S. S. Moore. The great majority of the early settlers are still residents of Burden. The town has not, as yet, been incorporated, but the matter is now being agitated, and it will probably soon become a city of the third class.

Prior to the founding of Burden, there was a country post office two miles northwest of this point, known as Moscow. Here Z. W. Hogue was Postmaster. When the town came into assured existence, Moscow was abolished and Burden established, with E. A. Henthorn, the present official, in charge. The post office was first located in a small frame building on Main street, where it remained until removed, in 1882, to the stone building occupied by the Enterprise.

The first hostelry in the town was run by J. H. McCumber, who moved a large house from the country and, after some alterations, opened it to the public. The second hotel was the Hiseler House, put up by the town company and run until 1881 by Solomon Hiseler. The Summit House was built in 1880 by S. S. Moore, who still runs it.

The town now has a population of about 400, and the following industries: General stores, 7; drug stores, 1; hardware, 1; hotels, 3; jewelry stores, 1; agricultural implements, 3; land and loan offices, 2; lumber yards, 1; furniture stores, 3; livery stables, 1; meat markets, 1; restaurants, 1; millinery stores, 1; billiard rooms, 1; blacksmiths, 2. The professions are represented by two physicians and one attorney.

Prior to the existence of Burden, there was a district school one mile north of the town site. This building was moved to town in the summer of 1881. School was taught in the school year of 1881–82, by E. A. Millard and Miss Mattie West, and in 1882–83, by T. J. Rood and Mrs. Mary A. Rood. One hundred and fifty-four scholars are now enrolled and in attendance. A stone building will soon be erected to meet the demand for more room. This structure will have four rooms; cost about $4,000, and will be completed in the summer of 1883.

It is difficult to decide which of the three religious bodies of the town should be accorded priority, as two of them had an organization and services at points near town long before the railway made Burden a possibility.

The Methodist Church had been holding services in the district schoolhouse near town, and moved in at an early day. Its first pastor was C. W. Commons, who remained until the spring of 1882, when J. Q. Knight, the present incumbent, was appointed. A fine church building was completed and dedicated in 1882. To this church belongs, nominally at least, the only Sabbath-school of the town. This has an average attendance of seventy-five, and is in charge of J. H. Phelps.

The Baptist Church also had been worshiping at the schoolhouse near town. It was first supplied by Rev. Mr. Thomas, of Winfield, then by Rev. R. S. Thompson, and now by Rev. S. P. Firestone. It has a membership of twenty. Services are held once in each month. As yet, it has no house of worship, and occupies the school building.

The Christian Church was organized in the spring of 1882, by Rev. J. W. Shively, of Lane, Kan., who still officiates once a month at this point. It has a membership of about thirty-five. Services are held in the schoolhouse.

Burden Lodge, No. 88, A. O. U. W., was organized on February 25, 1882, with a membership of thirty-five, and the following officers who still hold place: E. A. Millard, M. W.; E. A. Henthorn, P. M. W.; J. F. Teter, Foreman; E. Pate, Overseer; J. A. Goforth, Rec.; H. W. Young, F.; J. H. Phelps, Medical Examiner. The order now numbers thirty-nine. Meetings are held on Saturday of each week in A. O. U. W. hall. The society has never had a death, and has property to the amount of $100.

The Enterprise was started in April, 1880, by D. O. McCray. Its form was that of a six-column folio with a "patent outside." In August, 1881, McCray sold the office to Henthorn & Floyd. Six months later the style of the firm was changed to Henthorn & Bro., and in December, 1882, J. W. Henthorn, of Missouri, was associated as managing editor. Since February, 1882, the paper has been a seven-column sheet. It now has a circulation of 900; issues Thursdays, and is straight Republican in politics.

MURDER OF SHERIFF SHENNEMAN.

On Tuesday, January 23, 1883, Sheriff Shenneman, of Cowley County, Kan., was fatally shot at Udall Station, in the northern part of the same county, by Charles Cobb, of Jefferson County, Kan., who had just escaped arrest for a crime committed there by killing the Constable who attempted to arrest him. Sheriff Shenneman had received notice from the Jefferson County Sheriff of the escape of the criminal, and learning that he was in the vicinity, had issued posters dated January 12, describing the party, and offering a reward for information, etc. On the 15th of the same month, a young man, mounted on a pony, came to the house of Waller Jacobus, a wealthy farmer, residing in Maple Township, and stating that his name was George T. Smith, and that he had just come through from Texas to Dodge City with a drove of cattle, asked for employment until spring, when he wished to return to his home in Pennsylvania. Mr. Jacobus, not having work for him at that time, he proposed to remain for a time as a boarder. This was acceded to, and he staid a week, and was then given work. Soon after hiring him, Mr. Jacobus saw one of the posters of Sheriff Shenneman, which so accurately described young Smith, as he called himself, that, taken in connection with the fact that Smith always carried weapons, he became convinced that he was harboring a criminal, and accordingly wrote to the Sheriff to that effect. On Tuesday morning, January 23, Mr. Shenneman drove over to the place of Jacobus, about twenty miles from Winfield, and by arrangement with Jacobus, was introduced to the family, including his workman, as Dr. James, of Udall. The Sheriff decided at once that he had found his man, and soon after dinner attempted to arrest him by throwing his arms around him from behind. Cobb, however, was extremely strong and agile, and after a long struggle, they both fell, when Cobb shot the Sheriff with his revolver, inflicting two wounds, one of which proved fatal. Although so terribly wounded, and suffering from pain and loss of blood, Sheriff Shenneman did not relax his hold until Cobb was secured by Jacobus and a man who had been called by his wife. The two succeeded in getting a rope around his neck and choking him until he gave up. Mr. Shenneman, now almost exhausted, was laid on a bed, and his wounds examined and dressed. His friends arrived from Winfield in the afternoon, and remained with him until he died, on Thursday evening about 9 o'clock. On Friday morning, his body was taken to Winfield for interment, the funeral being appointed for the following Sunday, when it was attended by a great concourse of people from the city and surrounding country, including the Sheriffs of all the adjoining counties. In the meantime, Cobb had been taken to Winfield on Tuesday afternoon, by Marshal Herrod and Sheriffs McIntire and Taylor, and confined in the Winfield jail that night. The next afternoon he was taken to Sedgwick County and confined in the Wichita Jail. On Thursday morning the Sheriff of Jefferson County arrived at Wichita, accompanied by a farmer of the same county, who had lived near Cobb, and knew him well, and who immediately identified him. It was determined, however, to remand him to the jail in Winfield, and on Saturday morning he was placed in a carriage, and, in charge of four Sheriffs, was brought to Winfield; but, on arriving at the town, it became so evident that the prisoner would inevitably be lynched if put in the jail (the citizens being wild with excitement) that the prisoner was taken from the carriage, and taken on foot, by two of the Sheriffs, to the Badger Creek road, where, toward morning, they were enabled to get a team, and take their prisoner again to Wichita, by way of Douglas, arriving Sunday. On the following Wednesday, January 31, Cobb was again brought back to Winfield by Deputy Taylor, and lodged in jail, without any signs of violence being manifested by the citizens. Between 2 and 3 o'clock the following morning, however, masked men entered the jail, obliging the guard to keep silence, by the aid of loaded revolvers, and taking the prisoner to the K. C., L. & S. Railroad bridge hung him to a cross-tie; a portion of the maskers keeping off the crowd which had gathered with their revolvers. Soon after 9 o'clock, the body was cut down by direction of Coroner Wells, taken to the court house, a jury impaneled, witnesses sworn, and evidence taken, but no proof elicited as to who were the lynchers. On Friday afternoon the jury brought in a verdict, concluding thus: "The said jurors, upon their oaths, do say, that the said Charles Cobb came to his death on the morning of February 1, 1883, by being hung by the neck, from the railroad bridge of the Kansas City, Lawrence & Southern Kansas Railroad across the Walnut River, in Cowley County, Kan., at the hands of parties unknown to the jury. Signed, T. R. Bryan, S. C. Smith, Henry Brown, A. D. Hendricks, A. E. Baird and J. A. Cooper.

The following brief biography of the murdered Sheriff is taken from the Winfield Telegram:

"Albert Taylor Shenneman was born in Bridgeport, Wayne Co., Ohio, April 10, 1846. Early in the war, when but sixteen years of age, he enlisted in the three-months service, afterward enlisting in Company D, Seventh Illinois Cavalry, with which he served until the close of the war. He came to this county in the fall of 1870, and has resided in Winfield ever since. During that time he was elected Constable once or twice, and served a considerable time as City Marshal. In the fall of 1879, he was elected Sheriff of Cowley County, and re-elected again in 1881. Long before the end of his first term, he was acknowledged to be one of the best Sheriffs the county had ever had, and was regarded by like officers in the State as one of the most capable and efficient officers within her borders. Possessing untiring energy and courage, without fear in any form, he was a terror to evil doers everywhere. His loss by our people is regarded as most irreparable. While of opposite political faith, the Telegram can but say:

"'His valor shown upon our crests to-day,
Hath taught us how to cherish such high deeds,
Even in the bosom of our adversary.'"

After remaining there three months, most of the time more dead than alive with typhoid and pneumonia fevers, he, with the assistance of the Caldwell family and other Union people, made his escape, disguised as a negro woman, and reached the Union lines at Bull's Gap. Of the twenty-five boys captured at Big Springs and taken to Richmond and afterward to Andersonville, only two ever returned. They endured all the horrors for which the Southern prisons were so justly noted. He was in all the battles of his command in the Atlanta campaign, afterward in the battle of Nashville, Tenn. Was mustered out of the service at Pulaski, Tenn., June 17, 1865. He came to Kansas in 1870, locating in Douglas County, subsequently removing to Cowley County, where he has since resided. RAWLINS COUNTY.

RAWLINS County, the westernmost of the late organized counties of Kansas, is in the northern tier of counties, the twelfth one from the Missouri River, the second one from Colorado. It was named after Gen. John A. Rawlins, who went into the Cabinet of Gen. Grant as Secretary of War March 11, 1869, and died September 6, 1869, while holding the office. Its area is 1,080 square miles; it embraces Towns 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5, and Ranges 31, 32, 33, 34, 35 and 36.

The general surface of the county is gently undulating. The average width of the bottom is three-fourths of a mile; of the timber belts one-fourth of a mile. Prairie land embraces about 96 per cent of the territory; timber land, 4 per cent. The soil is a rich, black loam; springs of living water are numerous; excellent clay for making brick exists; white and yellow magnesian limestone is abundant, and what is called native lime is found in large banks.

The county is watered by the South and North Forks of the Sappa, which rise in Sherman County, and by the Beaver, Little Beaver and North Beaver Creeks, the first two of which also rise in Sherman County. The Beaver waters the southwest and central portions of the county. The varieties of timber are ash, box elder, cottonwood, elm, walnut and willow.

August C. Blume, August Deitlieff, Albert E. Lange, Charles Nae and Antone Stermer, five Germans, made the first settlement in the county in April, 1875. When they came they saw a roving band of Cheyenne Indians. Three of these men remained in the county, the others returned East.

Mr. Blume is Chairman of the Board of Commissioners.

Mr. Stermer was shot in his own corn-field, within a few steps of his wife, Dena Stermer. Mrs. S. is now improving their claim. Mrs. Bella, wife of August C. Blume, was on their claim during the raid made by the Cheyennes, and was often months alone prior to the raid, while her husband was working for food for his family. Mr. Lange is a brother of Mrs. Stermer, whose husband was killed by the Indians. John Bands, from Bohemia, came to the county in the spring of 1877, and his boy, Karl, is the first child born in the county. Isaac Webber, Simeon Holstein and Jefferson McCoy, cattle men, followed in the settlement.

Rawlins County was created by the Legislature of 1873, and organized May [illegible], 1881, with Atwood as temporary county seat. In November, 1880, the election was held as a municipal township of the county, also at the township election in February, 1881. As a county, Rawlins voted on the county seat in July, 1881, and at the general election in November, 1881; it held township elections in February, 1882, and voted at State election November 7, 1882.

In 1880, it polled 152 votes; in February, 1881, about 100; in July, 214; in November, 175; in February, 1882, its vote was 192; in November, [illegible]. George H. Case, of Jewell County, was the Senator; O. L. Palmer, was elected Representative in 1880; A. T. Lloyd, in 1882, but he was denied a seat in the House in 1883. The House had 125 members without the Rawlins County member, and it compromised the matter by paying Mr. Lloyd mileage and per diem for about twenty days.

The vote of Rawlins County at the Presidential election was Garfield, [illegible]; Hancock, 61. Its gubernatorial vote has been as follows: In 1880, St. John, Republican, [illegible]; Ross, Democrat, 64. ATWOOD.

In April, 1879, J. M. Matheny and T. A. Andrews laid out the town of Atwood on the west one-half of the southeast quarter and the east one-half of the southwest quarter of Section [illegible], Town [illegible], Range [illegible]. Mr. Matheny was President and Mr. Andrews Secretary of the Town Company, and was the Deputy Superintendent of Public Instruction. Owing to the location of the town site on school land, there was a change made in the site, and a union in the early spring of 1880 of [illegible], old and new Atwood in the present town of Atwood.

The county seat contest was between Atwood and [illegible] dell, six miles north of it. Atwood was the victor, and the county seat was permanently located here in July, 1881.

The Legislature of 1888 provided for terms of the District Court in the Seventeenth Judicial District for Rawlins County, commencing on the second Monday of May and the second Monday of November of each year, and attached Cheyenne County thereto for judicial purposes.

Judge William H. Pratt held the first term of court—a special one—at Atwood February 28, 1882. The attorneys then present were G. Webb Bertram, J. A. Hewes, J. M. Matheny, L. S. Webb and M. A. Wilson. There were no jury cases. A special term commenced also August 28, 1882. There were twenty-three cases on the docket, three for divorce, six State cases. The one consuming the most time was a libel suit by Linus S. Webb against James D. Greason and Cyrus Anderson, of the Citizen. The jury brought in a verdict of not guilty, and costs of prosecution were assessed to the county.

HODGEMAN COUNTY.

LOCATION AND SETTLEMENT.

HODGEMAN County was created by an act of the Legislature of 1868, but was not organized until 1879. Its area is 864 square miles; it is twenty-four miles from north to south; thirty-six miles from east to west. It embraces Townships 21, 22, 23 and 24, of Ranges 21, 22, 23, 24, 25 and 26. It is bounded on the north by Ness; on the east by Pawnee and Edwards; on the south by Ford; on the west by Gray and Lane.

In the spring of 1877, settlements were commenced. There was only a small acreage of wheat sowed, and the crop was cut short by hail. The average yield in 1878, was twenty-six bushels per acre, and other grain and vegetable crops were good in the years 1877 and 1878. The best yield of winter wheat in 1879 was four bushels per acre. Spring crops were a failure. There was a small growth of sweet and Irish potatoes, turnips, pumpkins and squashes and an abundance of melons. The summer crop embracing sorghum, rice corn, broom corn and millet, gave a medium yield in one-half of the county, the other half being almost an entire failure. In 1880, winter and spring grain were an entire failure; summer crops were better than in 1879; but little Indian corn was raised, but considerable of rice corn, which is a good substitute for feed and food. Plenty of fodder was secured for stock. The drouth, of unparalleled duration in Western Kansas, commencing about the 1st of September, 1878, so affected the settlers of Hodgeman County, that they made appeals for temporary aid, and Rev. E. N. Ruddock secured valuable contributions from Eastern Kansas for these people. A Central Aid Committee was formed in the county; C. E. Roughton was Chairman and Samuel Townsend was its Secretary. The committee elected by the people in mass meeting to distribute the donations received consisted of William A. Agee, L. P. Mack and R. O. Silvius.

The Baptist, Christian, Congregational, Lutheran, Methodists and Roman Catholics have organizations in the county; the most numerous are the Christians. Rev. D. M. Jessup is one of the prominent spiritual teachers.

Hodgeman County has 84,820 acres of public lands. Jetmore, its permanent county seat, is situated just about in the center of the county from north to south and from east to west. It is accessible from the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad from the county seats of Pawnee, Edwards and Ford Counties, Larned, Kinsley and Dodge City.

The Hodgeman Center Post Office, two and a half miles distant from Jetmore, was absorbed by the latter office June 10, 1880.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION.

In 1878, there were seventy-two organized counties in Kansas. During 1879, five were organized, of which Hodgeman was the first. Early in 1879, Gov. St. John appointed S. A. Sheldon as Census Taker for Hodgeman County. Many of the then settlers of the county thought it better to organize the county as a municipal township, deeming it too young to support itself without going into debt. But while Mr. Sheldon was taking the census, public meetings were held in every quarter of the county, and the men that the majority of the settlers desired as the temporary officers of the county were E. M. Prindle for County Clerk; J. W. Hunter, D. McCarty and Samuel Townsend for County Commissioners, and a petition to the Governor requesting such action was forwarded by a messenger. March 29, 1879, the Governor issued a proclamation organizing Hodgeman County, appointing John W. Hunter, Jonathan R. Wilson and S. A. Sheldon, County Commissioners, and W. W Wheeland as County Clerk, and designating the town of Hodgeman Center as the temporary county seat.

Monday, April 14, 1879, was the day appointed by the Commissioners for their first meeting; but neither Mr. Hunter nor Mr. Wheeland were there, whereupon the Fordham Republican commented as follows:

"We presume that Mr. Wheeland, the Governor's County Clerk, will be on hand at the next meeting, providing by that time he establishes a residence in the county. It looks as though the Governor was straining a point somewhat when he ignored the fact that we had competent material for county officers and went to Edwards County for a Clerk."

The meeting of the County Commissioners was held April 28, 1879. Each Congressional Township was constituted a road district, and Road Overseers were appointed for each one, and the county was laid off into the four municipal townships of Marena, Sterling, Center and Roscoe—the two former, each containing four; the two latter, eight Congressional townships.

The County Commissioners' meeting held May 5, 1879, recommended J. W. Marlow to the Governor for appointment as County Superintendent of Public Instruction, and two persons in each municipal township for Justice of the Peace. The Governor, however, declined to appoint these officers.

At a meeting of the board held May 17, 1879, a contract was made with C. B. Hamilton & Co., of Topeka, to furnish the county with books and blanks.

July 7, 1879, the Board of Commissioners made the following appointments: Louis Stroud, Treasurer; Samuel Townsend, Register of Deeds; William A. Agee, County Superintendent of Public Instruction; W. J. Iliff, County Surveyor; E. B. McPherson, Trustee for Marena Township; A. A. Lord, Sterling; John Gillespie, Center; Joseph Nelson, Roscoe Township. In September, 1879, County Clerk Wheeland received a letter from the State Superintendent of Public Instruction to the effect that he would not recognize the appointment of Mr. Agee as County Superintendent of Public Instruction.

Hodgeman County was in the Ninth Judicial District, of which Samuel R. Peters was Judge, and in June, 1879, he appointed D. G. Curtis, Clerk of the District Court, and Edgar R. Fulton, County Attorney. The county—in 1883—is in the Sixteenth Judicial District, of which J. C. Strang, of Pawnee, is Judge.

At the general election, November 4, 1879, a vote was taken on the location of the county seat, with the following result: Buckner, 199; Marena, 107; Hodgeman Center, 40; Fordham, 5. The name of Buckner was changed to Jetmore a short time after the permanent location of the county seat.

The result of the election of 1879 was so unsatisfactory to "the powers that be" in Hodgeman at that time that an action was held in the Supreme Court of the State, which was entitled:

"The State of Kansas ex. rel. vs. the Board of County Commissioners of the County of Hodgeman, S. A. Sheldon, J. R. Wilson and J. W. Hunter. Original proceedings in mandamus."

The defendants were compelled to make the canvass, and the county started in with a new set of officers, who had been opposed by the out-going powers. The retiring County Commissioners issued to J. W. Crawford, their attorney in the mandamus suit, on January 3, 1880, the sum of $650. Commissioner Wilson was allowed $38 for expense attending suit vs. county on the 13th of January, and each of the Commissioners $75, which was the last act of their official lives as such Commissioners.

This county is a part of the Thirty-seventh Senatorial District. It was represented in the State Senate of 1881 by J. C. Strang, of Pawnee County; in 1883, by Simon Motz, of Ellis. In the election that will occur in 1884, it will be in the Thirty-fifth Senatorial District. Samuel Townsend was elected as the first Representative to the Legislature from Hodgeman County, but there was no session during the term for which he was elected. In the session of 1881, Alexander Newby was the Representative; in 1883, R. J. Kenyon. The district is No. 119.

At the meeting of the County Commissioners February 2, 1880, the board accepted a lease for the building in which the county offices were held, from Mrs. Elizabeth Haun, for the consideration of $1.

The following is the official roster of the county:

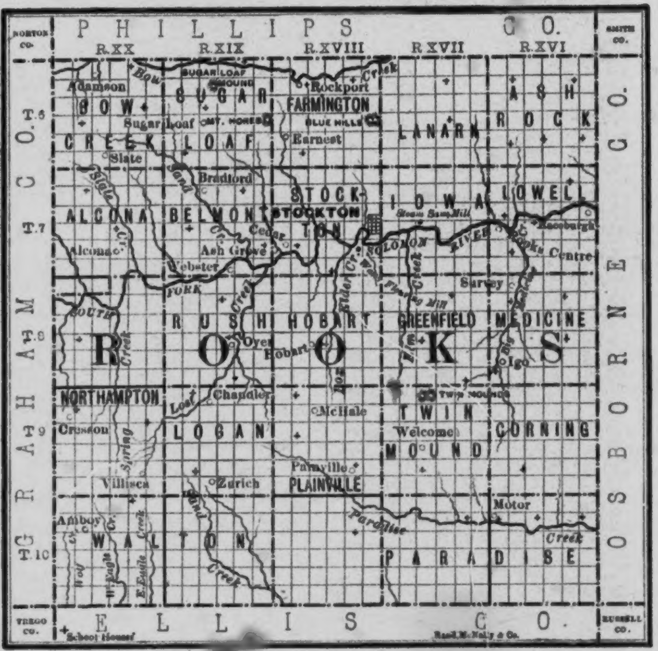
ROOKS County is in the second tier of the northwestern counties of Kansas, and fifth from the western boundary of the State. It contains 576,000 acres of land and is divided into twenty-one townships.

The general characteristics of the county as to soil, climate, &c., are similar to its neighboring counties, the soil possessing the same wonderful fertility and retention of moisture. Northwestern Kansas has been under-rated as an agricultural region, on account of the slovenly mode of farming adopted by too many of its early settlers. It may be set down as a verity that industrious and intelligent farmers can produce as abundant crops of wheat, corn, oats, barley, sorghum, broom corn, potatoes and other products usually grown in this latitude as any section of this wonderful State. Rooks is well adapted for both agriculture and the pasturage of stock, being well watered and the land rich and undulating.

The face of the county may be thus divided: Upland, 80 per cent; and bottom land, 20 per cent; forest (government survey), 1 per cent; prairie, 99 per cent. Average width of bottoms, one and a half miles. The general surface of the country is level, with bluffs in southeastern portion of the county. There are belts of timber, red and white elm, cottonwood, ash, hackberry, black walnut and cedar, in narrow belts along the streams. In some sections of the county gypsum is found. No coal has yet been discovered. Beautiful magnesian lime stone is abundant and is extensively used for building purposes in both country and the towns. From 1875 when the first reliable census was taken, the population has increased from 567 to 9,432 the present year, which shows a rapid increase, fully keeping pace with neighboring counties.



McNulty, born Christmas night, 1871, on Elm Creek, three miles east and south of Stockton. The first death in the county was Erastus Foster, two miles from Stockton, in the spring of 1873. He was buried in the Stockton grave-yard.

On the 7th of June, 1875, two men, with thirty-five Texas ponies, came to the South Fork, near Stockton, and encamped, and gave notice that they desired to dispose of their stock. The people of the village soon gathered to inspect the ponies, and one of the two strangers went up town to make some purchases. While the citizens were examining the live-stock, the sheriff of Ellis County, named Ramsay, accompanied by Joseph McNulty, sheriff of Rooks, rode up, heavily armed, and announced that the ponies were stolen property He ordered the thief to throw up his hands, but instead of obeying the order the man jumped behind a pony and made ready to shoot. Both Ramsay and the horse thief were armed with needle guns and fired simultaneously and both dropped dead. The thief's companion was hunted up and fired on and his jaw was broken, but he made his escape. Sheriff Ramsay, who had also served as city marshal of Hays City, had killed nine men while in the discharge of his official duties.

In 1872 two boys named Roberts, who had made a claim in Medicine Township, were fired on and killed by a desperado named Johnson.

In 1878 a cattle dealer from Kentucky, was murdered, robbed and buried in the sand twelve miles east of Stockton. A day or two afterwards the body was discovered by some children. Friends in Kentucky were notified and the body was sent to his former home for interment.

EARLY SETTLERS.

The first settlers in Rooks County were ten persons engaged in the stock business named James, Thomas, Joseph, John and Francis McNulty (brothers, originally from Massachusetts), Tunis Bulas, John Wells, John Powell, Seal Northup and Capt. J. Owens. They arrived in January, 1871, and all took the first claims made in the county, in what afterward became Stockton Township. They came from Washington County, Kan., and with the exception of Jas. McNulty and Capt. Owens all became permanent residents. Soon after these settlers followed John Shorthill, who still resides on his original claim in Lowell Township. Mrs. Robert E. Martin, who came with her husband and family in the fall of 1871, was the first woman who settled in Rooks County. She still resides in Lowell Township. Following these early settlers soon came Thomas Boylan, Henry Purdy, S. C. Smith, M. M. Stewart, G. W. Patterson, Henry Hill, Geo. Steele, John Russell, Lyman Randall, John Lawson, W. H. Barnes, Geo. W. Beebe, the Dibbles, Parks, and others, who are still residents of the county.

The first house erected in Stockton Township, and Rooks County, was erected in February, 1871, by the McNulty brothers, two and a half miles south of the county town on the south side of South Solomon. The first marriage occurred in Lowell Township, January 1, 1878. William E. Newton was married to Mary M. Young, by E. M. Cooper, a Justice of the Peace. Since that time two hundred and eighty-five marriage licenses have been issued by the probate judge of Rooks County. The first child born in the county was Myrtle Maude, daughter of Thomas

LOCAL MATTERS.

A county court house, 42x52 feet, was erected in 1881, at a cost of $5,000. This splendid structure is built of the elegant magnesium limestone, found in large quantities in the immediate neighborhood. The city of Stockton paid $3,000 for the walls, and the house was finished at the expense of the county. The early courts were held in the hall over the stone store, and afterwards other rooms were used for court purposes. A strong jail, built of cottonwood logs, and on which many tons of iron were used to strengthen it, has been built near the court house. Before the completion of the jail, prisoners were taken to Ellis County for safe-keeping.

The two mills and creamery mentioned below are all located in the neighborhood of Stockton.

W. W. Watson, grist mill; capital invested, $9,000; value of product, $110,000.

J. A. French, grist mill; capital invested, $6,000; value of product, $100,000.

C. H. Buechman, creamery; capital invested, $3,000; value of product, $22,000.

These establishments give employment to eight teams and twenty men.

The County Agricultural Society was first organized in 1879 and held a fair at Stockton the same year. The officers were: L. C. Smith, President; Lloyd Selby, Secretary, and C. C. Chapman, Treasurer. A number of untoward circumstances caused failures to hold meetings in 1880 and 1881, but the present year a re-organization was effected, and a very successful fair closed at Stockton October 5th. The present officers are: L. C. Smith, President; J. B. Clark, Secretary, and J. C. Denny, Treasurer.

Newspapers.—The Rooks County Record, the Republican journal of the county, was established December 6, 1879, by W. L. Chambers and T. C. McBreen. The Record has been regularly issued ever since. It is published in quarto form, and its columns display both ability and energy. October 16, 1882, J. W. Newell, the pioneer printer of the county, purchased Mr. McBreen's interest in the establishment. The Record is bold and outspoken in defence of its principles, and enjoys a large circulation and a liberal advertising patronage.

The Stockton News, the able greenback labor paper, was the first journal established in Rooks County. J. W. Newell started the News January 6, 1876, as an advocate of republicanism. For one year the office was removed to Plainville, where a paper was published, but a return to Stockton was found necessary. It was but a five column folio at the beginning, but is now a six column quarto. The paper enjoys a liberal patronage. During the early part of 1882 B. C. Maynard became proprietor and editor, and the News became an advocate of the principles of the national labor party.

Churches and Sabbath Schools.—There are thirteen church buildings in the county, erected at an expense of $6,300, with a seating capacity of 1,300. To these churches are attached 466 members. In addition there are many church organizations. The Congregationalists have six organizations and 136 members. The Presbyterians have three organizations, and 70 members. The Methodist Episcopals have five organizations, four resident clergymen, and a membership of 160. The Christian denomination has three organizations, with a membership of 65. The United Brethren have seven organizations and a membership of 110. There are six Catholic congregations in the county, with a membership of 130. Their house of worship in Stockton is the most expensive church building in the county. It is 33x50, and built of stone. The cost of the house was $2,000. The Congregationalists also have a substantial house in Stockton, built of magnesian limestone at an expense of nearly $2,000. The Baptists, who, by the way, were the pioneers, one of their elders, Joy Bishop, having delivered the first sermon preached in the county (at Stockton), in 1873, have two church organizations, at Motor and Stockton, with a membership of 65. In addition to these, the Friends have one organization and the Evangelists one.

The Sabbath schools of Rooks County are mostly conducted on the "union" plan, two or more sects uniting in a neighborhood and working together. There are sixteen schools in the county, with 66 teachers and 792 scholars. The first Sabbath school started in the county was opened in May, 1873, five miles west of Stockton. "Father" Surfus was the first superintendent. Two of the most efficient workers in these schools are Rev. Mr. Sherman, of Stockton, and H. P. Hard, of the same township.

SCHOOL AND AGRICULTURAL STATISTICS.

In 1880 the number of school districts in the county was 77, an increase of 21 over the preceeding year. In 1882 the districts number 84. In 1880 the superintendent received 54 reports from the district clerks, 17 more than in the preceeding year. In 1882 the number of reports reached 70. The number of pupils enrolled in the public schools in 1879 was 614; in 1880, 2,385; in 1882, 2,580. Average daily attendance in 1879 365; in 1880, 825; in 1882, 1,212. Number of teachers employed in 1879, 31; number in 1880, 54; in 1882, 71; average monthly salary of male teachers in 1879, $22.33; females, $14.38; average in 1880, for males, $17.97; females, $14.63; average salary in 1882, for males, $18.00; females, $15.00; Eight school houses were built in 1879, nine in 1880, and ten in 1881, including the high school at Stockton, erected at a cost of $4,000. The total school expenditures for the year 1882 amounted to $3,307. The value of school property has steadily increased, and is now estimated at $7,300, against $1,872 in 1879. The assessed valuation of school property in 1879 was returned at $144,940; in 1880 it reached $250,313; in 1882 it is estimated at $290,505. The first regular pay school in Rooks County was taught by W. H. Barnes, a thoroughly educated gentleman from Minnesota, who came to the county in the spring of 1872, and began a school in Stockton the same season. For several years he continued to teach in the town school, but having a knowledge of law he commenced practice and was chosen county attorney. Mr. Barnes now resides in Stockton and enjoys a lucrative practice.

To show that Rooks is more than keeping pace with her sister counties in agriculture, the acreage and yield of the early years are compared with the amounts and yield of the present season: In 1878 the acreage was 5,211, and the yield of the principal articles as follows: winter wheat, 23,848 bushels; rye, 16,464; spring wheat, 24,358; corn, 46,740; barley, 7,315; oats, 1,305; Irish potatoes, 8,160; sorghum, 6,497; millet and Hungarian, 744 tons; prairie hay, 400 tons; tobacco, cotton, broom corn, sweet potatoes, none. This year's crop makes the following exhibit, showing a large increase: winter wheat, 317,689 bushels; rye, 101,120; spring wheat, 16,320 bu.; corn, 600,000 bu.; prairie hay, 8,965 tons; oats, 38,475; Irish potatoes, 40,000 bu.; sweet potatoes, 3,750; sorghum, 119,900 gallons; broom corn, 813 tons; Hungarian and millet, 16,587 tons; Egyptian rice corn, 55,530; dairy products, 174,160 pounds butter. The aggregate value of these articles, not including 111 acres of flax, 9 acres of tobacco, and 5½ acres of cotton, at their marketable value, shows the sum of $634,077! A considerable portion of these products will be required for home consumption, but much of it will be sent forward to market, and the returns will relieve the settlers of indebtedness.

The county contains, according to the assessor's returns for 1882: 2,401 horses, 448 mules, 2,664 milch cows, 4,283 other cattle, 16,000 sheep and 5,200 swine. Of trees planted there are 190 acres walnut, 15 acres maple, 55 acres honey locust, 588 acres cottonwood, and 417 acres of other varieties. Of fruit trees (not bearing), there are 8,747 apple, 104,777 peach, 2,584 plum, and 1,368 cherry. The number of bearing trees is inconsiderable. The value of the agricultural implements owned in Rooks County is $30,366.

STOCKTON.

The city of Stockton, county seat of Rooks County, now containing a population of seven hundred was first settled in June, 1872. Several of the earliest settlers were cattle dealers and they named their new home Stocktown, or as it soon became Stockton. The first settler in the town was George W. Beebe, who also erected the first house and opened the first stock of goods. He came on to the town site in June, 1872. Other early settlers were S. C. Smith, who built the first frame house, bringing his lumber by team from a distance of 150 miles; Joseph McNulty, Marvin and Lyman Randall—the Randalls built in 1872, the large stone business house on Main street. W. O'Brien, Joseph and Jackson Dickson, Joseph Randall, Thomas McNulty. The first town officers, elected in 1873, were Charles Stuart, trustee; D. K. Dibble, clerk; John Park, treasurer; G. W. The first grist mill was built by Bulis and French, east of and near town line. Stockton is located on the second bottom on level prairie. A child of Geo. W. Norcutt, born in the spring of 1874, was the first birth in Stockton. The first burial in the grave-yard, was a man named Foster, whose death is noted elsewhere.

Stockton has just cause to be proud of her educational advantages, having a successful graded school in a substantial and elegant three-roomed, two-story building. The house was built in 1881, at an expense of $4,000. Three teachers are employed, with an enrollment of 150 scholars. Her earliest teacher, W. H. Barnes still takes a warm interest in the subject of education.

Stockton was organized as a city in the spring of 1879. The first officers were: C. E. Maynard, mayor; C. E. McDaniel, Jewell Elliott, M. M. Stewart, James Moore and John Sarver, councilman; D. DECATUR COUNTY.

DECATUR County was created by the act of the legislature of 1873. It is one of the northern tier of counties in the northwestern part of the State; ten counties lie between it and the Missouri River, two between it and Colorado. Its area is 900 square miles. The name of the county was given to it in commemoration of Commodore Stephen Decatur, who was born in Sinnepaxent, Md., and killed in a duel with Commodore James Barron, March 20, 1820, and who was a prominent actor in the war of 1812.

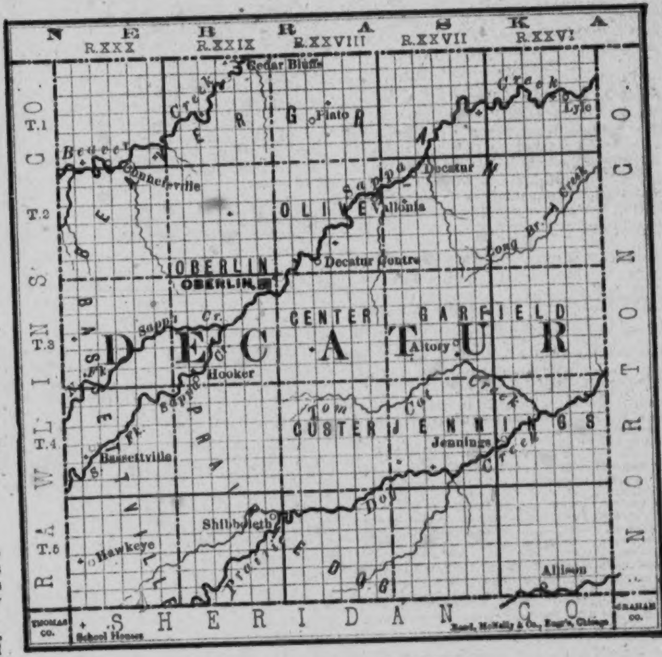
The county is well wooded and well watered. The timber belts range from one quarter to one half mile in width, and the general varieties are ash, box elder, cottonwood, elm and willow. The streams run from the southwest to the northeast. The principal streams are Beaver, Prairie Dog, Tom Cat and Long Branch creeks, and the two large forks of Sappa creek, making a valuable water supply. All of these streams empty into the Republican River, in southern Nebraska. Springs are numerous; the depth of wells is from 20 to 40 feet. The percentage of timber land is two; of prairie, 98 per cent. The land is gently undulating. The soil is of good depth, a rich black loam. There are are but little evidences of coal, but pure chalk has been found while boring for wells. In building stone there are the best qualities of magnesian limestone, hard and soft, of cream or yellow and of white colors.

GENERAL HISTORY.

The first claims known to have been taken by settlers within the limits of what is now Decatur County, were by Col. J. A. Hopkins, in December, 1872, and by D. Coburn, S. M. Porter, John Griffith and Henry M. Playford in Januasy, 1873. Col. Hopkins came to the place where he located in September 1872, but the date of his filing on land was December, 1872; the others mentioned above entered their claims as stated, although they had lived in the county prior to filing. Mrs. H. P. Gandy was the first white woman that settled and lived in the county.

The first post office established in the county was at Oberlin, then called Sappa, J. A. Rodehaver being appointed postmaster in April, 1874. The first school was kept near Oberlin, in the fall and winter of 1875-76, and taught by George Worthington. The first birth was that of a child to Henry Gandy and wife, in 1873; the first marriage that of Calvin Gay and Maggie Robinson in the fall of 1875, and the first death that of A. Austin, on the Sappa, in 1873. In the summer of 1874, R. L. Booth killed Frank Adams for insulting his wife—the first death by violence in the county.

During the month of September, 1878, a band of northern Cheyennes invaded Kansas. Crossing the State line near the southeast corner of Comanche County, about the 14th of the month, they divided into small bands and attacked the camps of stockmen along their route across and into the counties of Barber, Comanche, Clark, Meade, Ford and Foote, killing some and wounding others, and destroying and stealing stock and other property. After crossing the Arkansas River near Cimarron, Foote County, they passed almost due north, doing but little damage until they reached the counties of Sheridan, Decatur and Rawlins, where they committed most foul and brutal atrocities. Besides murdering men and destroying property, nameless outrages were committed on defenseless women and children. In Decatur County alone, eighteen men were slaughtered. The names of the victims are as follows: William Laing, John C. Laing, William Laing, Jr., Freeman Laing, J. G. Smith, Frederick Hamper, E. P. Humphrey, John Humphrey, Moses Abernathy, John C. Hutson, Geo. F. Walters, Marcellus Felt, Ed. Miskelley, Ferdinand Westphaled and son, Mr. Wright, Mr. Lull and Mr. Irwin.



During the raid, on September 30, Mr. H. D. Colvin, living eight miles southwest of Oberlin (on the South Fork of the Sappa) was away from his dwelling some few rods, when he was suddenly surprised by an advance party of the raiding Indians, who drove him to his house. When the main body came up, an attack was made on the house, but the whole two hundred or more were driven off by Mr. Colvin and his brave wife, with an old navy six-shooter and an equally antiquated shot gun. Mrs. Colvin fired the first shot at the savages with the shot gun. They left, doing no damage. In March, 1882, Henry Inman made a selection of 2,320 acres of lands in this county, for a part of the additional school lands the State was entitled to receive from the general government.

Nathan Haynes received about the 1st of January, 1882, a patent to the south half of Section 2, Town 2, Range 29. The first ever issued to school land in Decatur County.

The first law suit in Decatur County was in the court of F. Coard, Justice of the Peace of Oberlin Township. The county when organized, was in the fifteenth district, but on March 8, 1881, it was made a part of the new seventeenth district, and Rawlins and Cheyenne Counties were attached to Decatur for judicial purposes. The Legislature of 1883 detached Rawlins and Cheyenne from Decatur, provided for terms of court in Rawlins in the months of May and November, and attached Cheyenne thereto, for judicial purposes.

The Oberlin Herald was issued in June, 1879, by J. C. Humphrey and James N. Counter. Mr. Humphrey went on to the Belleville Telescope and in April, 1881, Mr. Counter became the sole manager, and continued as such until December, 1881, when William D. Street became the proprietor. During the latter part of the management under Mr. Counter, D. P. Havens became local editor. The Herald in 1883, is the only paper in the county. The Oberlin News was started August, 1881. Jacob C. Wilson and others were interested in it. On the 1st of March, 1882, is was purchased by the Herald and consolidated with it. J. E. Cochran had been its editor.

UNORGANIZED COUNTIES.

At this date (1882) there are still twenty-three unorganized counties in Kansas; these are as follows: Cheyenne, Sherman, Thomas, Wallace, St. John, Gove, Greeley, Wichita, Scott, Lane, Hamilton, Kearney, Sequoyah, Gray, Stanton, Grant, Arapahoe, Kansas, Stevens, Seward, Meade, Clark and Comanche counties. Of these, Cheyenne is attached to Rawlins County for judicial purposes; Sherman and Thomas, to Sheridan; Wallace, St. John and Gove, to Trego; Greeley, Wichita, Scott and Lane, to Ness; Hamilton, Kearney, Sequoyah and Gray, to Ford; and the immense and unexplored district of the southwest, comprising Stanton, Grant, Arapahoe, Kansas, Stevens, Seward, Meade, Clark and Comanche counties, to Barber County.

CHEYENNE County is the northwestern county of Kansas, and the only remaining unorganized one of the northern tier. It was created by the legislature of 1873, and takes the name of a hostile band of Indians.

The first district school taught in the county was at Kepferle, in the northeastern part of the county. The term ended March 13, 1882, A. M. Brenaman, Deputy County Superintendent and Deputy Clerk of the District Court, was the teacher. He had ten pupils. A Sunday-school was organized on Sunday, April 3, 1882, L. R. Heaton officiating as Superintendent; there were twenty persons in attendance upon this first Sunday-school in Cheyenne County. Mr. Brenaman has a drug store at Wano, the centrally located town of the county, which is on a mail route to Wallace, on the Kansas division of the Union Pacific, and to Collinsville, which is on the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad in Nebraska, Kepferle being on this route.

Mr. Ehorst was the first man to introduce fine-blooded sheep in the county. Fine specimens of coal have been found on Cherry Creek, west of Wano. In July, 1880, there were eleven actual tillers of the soil in the county, and three cattle ranches. Mr. Bingleman had 5,000 head of cattle and twenty hands; Mr. Davenport, 2,500, and six hands; Mr. Buck, 2,000, five hands.

In 1880 Cheyenne County had two postoffices, one post road and one store; in 1881 it had two more post roads, and the weekly was changed to a semi-weekly mail. Two fields of corn were raised, which produced 1,000 bushels; 2,000 acres were fenced, 100 acres tilled, and 100 acres broken.

Sheep husbandry has been started by M. Buck, on the South Fork of the Republican, near Wano. His wife and stepdaughter were the first women to settle in the county, in July 1880. The original discoverer of the county may be said to be Mr. A. M. Brenaman, who took to himself a wife in the autumn of 1882. The settled points, beside Kepferle and Wano, are Batino, Big Timber, Davenport, South Beaver and T-Wrench.

SHERMAN County was one of those created by the Legislature of 1873, and it was named after Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman. It is the westernmost county in the State, in the second of the northern tier of counties.

It is, in the main, very level land and almost treeless. Beaver Creek, Little Beaver and both forks of the Sappa River, rise in this county, and the North Fork of the Smoky Hill, passes from Colorado into the south part of the county, and out of it into Wallace.

Inez is laid out near the North Fork of the Sappa, in the geographical center of the county. Four miles north of it is Big Indian Springs, which is quite an expanse of water.

THOMAS County was created by the Legislature of 1873. It embraces thirty congressional townships and includes an area of 1,080 square miles.

Colby is situated in the exact geographical center of the county. Cumberland is a postoffice in the northeastern portion of the county. Letitia is situated in Township 7, Range 32, directly south of Cumberland. Streator is a postoffice about seven miles to the southwest of Letitia. Bray is a point around which considerable attention is paid to sheep husbandry and cattle raising.

LANE County is attached to Ness County as a municipal township. In 1880 its population was 632; in 1882, it was 352. It has two newspapers. The Lane County Progress was started by Taylor & Mitchell, in the spring of 1879. The Lane County Gazette was established at California January 29, 1880; W. H. Lee, editor and proprietor.

HAMILTON County, bordering on Colorado, has four counties in Kansas between it and Nebraska; two—Stanton and Kansas—between it and the Indian Territory; twelve between it and the counties of Linn and Bourbon, on the eastern border. It contains 977 square miles. There are sand hills in the southeastern portion of the county. The railroad stations are Aubrey, Syracuse, Midway and Coolidge, formerly Sargent.

Hamilton County, in common with the other counties attached to Ford, has held elections as a municipal township of that county, having their votes canvassed by the same canvassing board. The first township election was held May 12, 1874, at Syracuse, the central point of the county, electing M. P. Strall, Trustee, and a full corps of township officers. The election expenses were $13. The Ford County Commissioners fixed a tax-levy of 12½ mills on the dollar for Hamilton County.

Aubrey.—This place is nearly on the county line between Kearney and Hamilton counties. Mr. S. F. Kurtz is one of the prominent sheep-owners in this locality.

Syracuse.—This is the central town of the county. E. P. Barber is postmaster.

KEARNEY County has an area of 864 square miles; it is twenty-four miles from east to west; thirty-six miles from north to south.

The Arkansas, as it enters the county, some twelve miles from its southern boundary, runs in a southeasterly direction, and before it crosses its center line from east to west, its course is northwesterly.

Kearney County held its first election as a township at Lakin, July 7, 1879, polling 38 votes.

Lakin.—Business has been established at this point for ten years. John O'Loughlin, dealer in general merchandise, coal and lumber, came here in 1873. There is a school here well attended, and a new stone school house will be built from stone in the quarry west of Lakin. The court house is built of stone, and many of the dwellings of the citizens.

The first number of the Lakin Herald was issued December 2, 1882; Joseph Dillon, editor and proprietor. It is a nice, well conducted, seven-column newspaper, and it enters upon its second year with excellent prospects.

SEQUOYAH County is 864 square miles in area, being twenty-four miles from east to west, and thirty-six miles from north to south.

This is a treeless region. The Arkansas River runs south of the central portion of the county, mainly in a southeasterly direction. There are sand hills in the northeast corner of the county, and toward the southeastern part.

T. A. Carlon, J. R. Fulton, W. D. Fulton, C. J. Jones and John Stevens were the first settlers, locating here in the county in 1878 and in 1879. The points in the county are the following railroad stations: Pierceville, Garden City and Sherlock.

Sequoyah County first voted at Garden City, July 25, 1879, polling 67 votes. At the election held in November, 1881, Simon Motz, was elected to the Senate from the Thirty-seventh Senatorial District to fill a vacancy, and J. C. Strang was elected Judge of the Sixteenth Judicial District.

Irrigation was resorted to in the spring of 1879, and C. J. Jones was the first man that put it in practice in the State of Kansas. He was the prime mover in organizing all the irrigating companies that are now in operation, and constructing canals in the unorganized counties south of Southwestern Kansas.

Under the system of irrigation Squire Worrell has the model farm of the county. In the year 1882 his net income from thirty acres of cultivated land, exceeded over $4,000. From seven acres of alfalfa, he obtained three crops, yielding four tons per acre. On his last crop he obtained 140 bushels of seed which he sold at $10.50 per bushel. He realized about [illegible] from this crop. In proportion to the land cultivated, other farmers have done as well as Mr. Worrell, who has been at Garden City about three years. About 100 acres were irrigated in 1879; 300, in 1881; 1,000, in 1882. The canals have been enlarged and developed so as to water 5,000 acres in 1883.* The cost of water for the year past was $1 per acre, per season for the land that was flooded. All kinds of vegetables grow to enormous size, and crop yields have been reported as follows: Irish potatoes, from 300 to 400 bushels per acre; sweet potatoes, 600 bushels per acre; onions, from 400 to 600 bushels per acre; oats, from 60 to 100 bushels per acre, weighing from 36 to 41 pounds per bushel. The Garden City ditch, which is eight feet wide, two feet deep, has been continued until its length is about twelve miles. The charter of the Kansas Irrigating Company covers a length of over thirty miles, and its ditch when completed will irrigate 20,000 acres. The Minnehaha Irrigation Company, chartered July 6, 1880, have a ditch ready for use ten miles in length, twenty feet wide and three feet deep. This ditch is located on the south side of the Arkansas, and it commences at a point about six and a half miles west of Lakin, in Kearney County. It is expected it will irrigate a charming tract of land sixteen miles long and from two to three miles wide, embracing nearly 20,000 acres. The Great Eastern Irrigating Company, in which Senator Plumb and Lawrence capitalists are interested, will commence operations this year. Edward Russell, of Lawrence, is Secretary of the company. The soil, primarily fertile, will be still further enriched by the accumulated vegetable deposits that come with the snows down the Rocky Mountains, as they melt away and sweep down the Arkansas. The average height of the river banks is four feet.

Garden City has a population of nearly 400. It contains two hotels, two grocery stores, one general store, two carpenters, one lumber dealer, one blacksmith, one meat market, two physicians, three attorneys, a Congregational Church, a Methodist Episcopal organization, a Cumberland Presbyterian Society and a subscription school of some thirty pupils. A loan and savings bank building is being erected. The Deputy County Attorney is W. R. Hopkins. The county is attached to Ford for judicial purposes. B. B. Black is the station agent. Garden City is soon to be a city of the third class. As showing the sentiment of the people in regard to the sale of whisky, John Westerman proposing to open a saloon, a petition was signed by forty-four of the most influential voters of the city, asking Deputy County Attorney Hopkins to count upon them in supporting him in an effort to suppress the liquor traffic "in every way, shape or form, except as provided by law." The Good Templars have a thriving organization at Garden City, and own a good hall, which is occupied by the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The Garden City Irrigator, managed by W. E. Carr, commenced its existence about July 1, 1882. It is enthusiastically devoted to the local interests of the city and county. B. B. Black is the station agent at Garden City.

GRAY County was created March 2, 1881, absorbing the county of Foote and the south one-half of Buffalo. It was named in honor of Hon. Alfred Gray, who, at the time of his death—January 23, 1880,—was Secretary of the State Board of Agiculture.

Foote County held elections as a township of Ford County, and Gray has done likewise.

September 14, 1878, George U. Holcomb was [illegible] Deputy County Superintendent of Public Instruction of Foote County, and W. E. Caswell, Deputy County Surveyor. At the election held at Cimmaron, October 1, 1878, L. W. B. Johnson was elected Trustee of the county, thirty votes having been polled. Mr. Johnson was afterwards Deputy County Attorney of Foote County.

The Legislature of 1881, re-cast the counties of Foote, Lane and Buffalo, by giving Foote the name of Gray, and joining thereto the south one-half of Buffalo. The north one-half of Buffalo made the south part of Lane, and thereby the county of Buffalo was blotted out.

In the north part of the county are the points of Mason, New Buffalo and Patenville; in the northwest is Felix. On the railroad are the stations of Cimmaron and Belfast. The former place is quite a business point. The Cimmaron House is kept by W. J. Dixon, and Mr. Herzog has hotel accommodations and keeps a general store. Mr. A. D. Wettrick keeps a large general store and is engaged in the stock business.

J. H. Wooden of Kansas City issued the first number of the Cimmaron National Live-Stock Record, December 20, 1882. It is devoted especially to the live-stock interest of Southwestern Kansas, which interest is considered paramount to all others in that locality. The county has 278,520 acres of public land.
